Bonesteel, S. D., July 6.

SINCE the Government gave out the names of the young women who won free homesteads in the recently opened-up Rosebud district the eyes of many ambitious young bachelors have been turned toward them and their ranches. Young, unmarried, able-bodied and, many of them, good looking, these independent American women are rather unusual matrimonial prizes. Uncle Sam has given each of the 120 girls a free homestead of 160 acres, and they have gone busily to work to make valuable ranches for themselves.

The situation seems to have appealed to a great number of young men all over the country, who would very much like to share these homesteads. Letters of all kinds have been coming to Bonesteel Post Office gallantly offering to marry and help out the forlorn solitude of the maidenly firesides. Some of the men take a lofty tone in their letters, even suggesting that their railway fare be advanced, others inquire with some caution as to how much "work around the ranch" would be expected of a husband, and a few write in humble spirit, promising devoted love and eternal faithfulness.

The young women settlers have no silly objections to matrimony, but they have no intention of being imposed upon by adventurers. Many of the letters from tender-hearted men betray a lazy streak, and no lazy lover will ever win one of the girls. Some of the female settlers were school teachers, some were brought up on their fathers' ranches, and some are from various small cities of the Northwest and didn't know a mule from a yearling steer. But they have all gone to work, and are rapidly learning how to attend to the chickens, milk the cows and saddle their horses, which, like all ranch women, they ride astride. For companionship many of the girls are living together and work on each other's farms in company. Several of the homestead owners have younger and older sisters who have joined them, and among the female settlers are a few young widows.

The girls are well aware that most of the proposals of marriage have come from lazy fellows who have no serious intention to really do the hard work of developing their ranches. To guard against these shiftless adventurers the young women have agreed not to marry any man who has not first shown what he can do behind a plow or a mowing machine. He must know how to turn a furrow and not be afraid of putting in a good fourteen-hour day in haying time. The girls have decided to answer the most promising of the letters that have come to them and state frankly the situation.

The man who would marry the owner of a Bonesteel farm must come to Bonesteel and show

COPYRIGHT BY DE BRUNOFF 1904.

DETROIT, July 6.

OBERAMMERGAU and its Passion Play are to be rivalled here in a way that will offer one feature, at least, that is absolutely unique. Not only is a Bible play in preparation, but the actors selected for its presentation are ministers of the gospel.

The enterprise was engineered by Marcus La Blanche, a local literary man and playwright, and when he announced that the Book of Job, with its grand lesson of an upright man continuing to worship God and fear Him while victim of every conceivable misfortune except death, was his subject, he found no difficulty in gaining the co-operation of prominent clergymen. The first performance of this new Bible drama will be given in a few weeks. As yet the names of the clergymen who will enact the parts of Job, his wife, his three friends, his sons and daughters and the messengers who brought tidings of his series of misfortunes, up to the visitation of boils, are kept secret.

Mr. La Blanche, author of this dramatized version of the Book of Job, considers that section of Holy Writ the first drama ever written. He remarks that since the stage became a fixed institution we have had morality plays and miracle plays, but never a purely spiritual play. He claims his dramatization of the Book of Job to be the first purely spiritual play ever prepared for the stage, and it was his own idea to have it acted—so far as was practicable—by ministers of the gospel.

The dramatist's arrangement is of two acts and four tableaux. For the enlightenment of those in the audience who have neglected their Bible reading, the printed programmes will lead up to the opening tableau with these quotations:

> There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.
>
> And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters.
>
> His substance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she asses, and a very great household; so that this man was the greatest of all the men of the East.—Job, i., 1-3.

Succeeding verses quoted in the programme will tell how Satan appeared before the Lord and said that if God would only cease prospering Job and seriously afflict him, that good man would forthwith, "Curse Thee to Thy Face"; and how the Lord thereupon gave Satan leave to afflict Job as he saw fit, only to spare his life.

The play opens with a tableau described in Job, i., 13.

Tableau I.—The Feast.

And there was a day when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house.

Job, now at the height of his happiness and prosperity, is shown making burnt offerings to the Lord in another place. Suddenly a messenger, breathless and agitated, appears and addresses the patriarch. The following dialogue and explanations quoted literally from the Bible text in the play will serve as a synopsis—though in many instances the dramatist has invented appropriate speeches:

FIRST MESSENGER—The oxen were plowing, and the asses feeding beside them. And the Sabeans fell upon them, and took them away; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

(While he was yet speaking there came also another and said:)

SECOND MESSENGER—The fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burned up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

(While he was yet speaking there came also another and said.)

THIRD MESSENGER—The Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

(And while he was yet speaking there came also another and said:)

FOURTH MESSENGER—Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house; and behold, there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead: and I only am escaped alone to tell thee."

(Then Job arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped, and said:)

JOB—Naked came I out of my mother's womb and naked shall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

Tableau II.—Job and His Wife.

Job is sitting in ashes, covered with boils sent by Satan as a further infliction, and scraping himself with a potsherd. His wife comes.

WIFE OF JOB—Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God, and die.

JOB—Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? Shall we receive good at the hand of God and shall we not receive evil?

Tableau III.—Job and His Friends.

Now, when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place: Eliphaz, the Temanite, and Bildad, the Shuhite, and Zophar, the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment to come to mourn with him and to comfort him.

JOB—(To his friends)

Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, "There is a man-child conceived."

ELIPHAZ—(to Job)—Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands.

Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees.

But now it is come upon thee and thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

JOB—Oh, that my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my calamity laid in the balances together. * * *

Oh, that I might have my request, and that God would grant me the thing that I long for!

Even that it would please God to destroy me; that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off. * * *

BILDAD—How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of the mouth be like a strong wind?

Doth God prevent judgment? or doth the Almighty prevent justice? * * *

Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will He help the evildoers.

They that hate thee shall be clothed with shame; and the dwelling place of the wicked shall come to naught.

JOB—I know it is so of a truth—but how shall I man be just with God?

He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength: Who hath hardened himself against Him, and hath prospered? * * *

How much less shall I answer Him, and choose out my words to reason with him? * * *

I will say unto God, do not condemn me; Shew me wherefore Thou contendest with me. * * *

ZOPHAR—If thou prepare thine heart, and stretch out thine hands toward him;

If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let no wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles.

For thou shalt forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that passed away:

And thine age shall be clearer than the noonday: thou shalt shine forth and shalt be as the morning.

JOB—No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you.

But I have understanding, as well as you; I am not inferior to you; yea, who knoweth not such things as these? * * *

Surely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.

But ye are forgers of lies, ye are all physicians of no value.

Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble.

He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I; yea, thine own lips testify against thee.

JOB—I have heard many such things; miserable comforters are ye all. * * *

BILDAD—Wherefore are we counted as beasts and reputed vile in your sight?

(To his companions)—For he is cast into a net by his own feet, and his own counsel shall cast him down. * * *

His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street.

JOB—Thrice ten times have ye reproached me; are ye not ashamed that ye make yourselves strange to me? * * *

Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard, I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

* * *

My kinfolks have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me. * * *

They that dwell in mine house and my maids count me for a stranger. I am an alien in their sight. * * *

My breath is strange to my wife, though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body. * * *

Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye, my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me. * * *

Then one of the minister actors—in a capacity like that of the chorus in ancient Greek drama—reads from the Book of Job how God appears to Job out of the whirlwind and tells him of the divine purpose, at length, telling Job's friends how His wrath is kindled against them and commanding them to save themselves from the consequences of their folly by making burnt offerings.

Tableau IV.—Job's Triumph.

The final tableau shows Job's triumph. He is surrounded by all his relatives and friends, cured of his disease, and while he rejoices the minister actor intones from the final chapter of the Book of Job:

> So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had fourteen thousand sheep and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses.
>
> He had also seven sons and three daughters. * * *
>
> And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job; and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.
>
> After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, and saw his sons and his sons' sons, even four generations.
>
> So Job died, being old and full of days.

The final tableau showing Job rejoicing among his relatives and friends over his triumph as a righteous man who continued to fear and worship God amid the most terrible misfortunes ends with a choral piece, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away."

As above noted, the dramatic adaptor of the Book of Job, does not confine his dialogue wholly to the Scriptural speech. In many instances, in order to make the action and spirit of the drama more plain, he puts his own words into the mouths of the characters.

The first performance of this novel Scriptural drama, with clergymen for actors and with appropriate costumes and scenic arrangements, is awaited with eager anticipations in Detroit church circles.

SOCIETY WOMEN FLOCK TO PRISON FOR FASHIONABLE GOWNS.

HOW Nebraska's Convicted Murderess, Serving a Life Sentence for Slaying Her Husband, Is Earning Money to Keep Her Little Daughter and to Fight for Her Own Freedom.

THE most fashionable dressmaking parlor in the town of Lincoln, Neb., is in the State Penitentiary, presided over by a woman who has been condemned to life imprisonment for the murder of her husband.

"Oh, but she makes such beautiful clothes!" This is the verdict of the fashionable woman of the State.

"Guilty of shooting her husband to death!" This was the verdict returned by the jury before whom she was tried and convicted.

In spite, however, of the judge who sentenced her and the jury who held her guilty, hundreds of women in Nebraska believe her innocent. While they are fighting for her pardon she makes their dresses.

Ask in the town of Lincoln for a good dressmaker and some one is sure to recommend to you instantly Mrs. Lena Margaret Lillie. Her address—State Penitentiary, cell No. 63.

"You can't do better," some one of her patrons will tell you; "not even if you travel to New York. Mrs. Lillie's reputation in the West is equal to that of any dressmaker in the East. She's an artist, even if she does sew and fit in a cell."

Go to the jail, as of course you will if you are a woman, and in Lincoln and in need of a dress, and you will as likely as not find outside its great barred doors a couple of carriages waiting for their fashionable owners, who are within consulting Prisoner Lillie.

You will probably be kept waiting even after you have presented your card, and the warden has announced that Mrs. Lillie will see you. You see there are so many ahead of you. Mrs. So and So, and Mrs. this one and Mrs. that one all have fittings. You will recognise the best names in Nebraska, and in anticipation of a dream of a gown possess your soul in patience.

A Prison Modiste.

At last the warden's good wife will come to conduct you in. In the woman's corridor you will find two or three fashionably dressed persons drinking tea, waiting their fittings. It is a novel scene inside a prison, but Mrs. Lillie's patrons will tell you it is quite worth while. And very soon you will see that their judgment is sound.

On exhibition in the warden's rooms are some of the exquisite things made by Mrs. Lillie, gowns of every sort and description. They are on view for those who may never have lived in Nebraska and may need assurance of her talents. They are there as an advertisement to get her all the custom, and all the money possible.

Half of what she earns is to be devoted to the needs of her young daughter, and the other half is to be spent in hunting for the man who, Mrs. Lillie declares, is the real murderer of her husband.

"I am innocent," has been her cry ever since that day, now nearly three years ago, when suspicion first rested upon her.

Until then she had been a fashionable and favorite dressmaker. Everyone knew her from Lincoln to David City, where she lived. To have a gown made by Mrs. Lillie was the ambition of any woman in the State who laid the slightest claim to being well dressed.

She became famous first because she was the only woman thereabouts who didn't say to her customers, "This is the way they are putting on bows this year," or "this is the way they are trimming the skirts." She made a specialty of original designs fitted to each individual customer. She used to protest indeed that she had to know a person pretty well before she could make the most satisfactory gown for her.

Her Reputation Was Made.

Mrs. Lillie's reputation was at its height when suddenly the entire community was shocked by the terrible news that Harry Lillie, the husband of the wonderful, artistic dressmaker, had been shot to death in his bed in the wee small hours of the morning while his wife slept beside him.

At first nothing was heard but expressions of sympathy for the wife. Sobbing and shuddering she told how she had been suddenly awakened out of a sound sleep by a crash, a terrible resounding noise.

She started and sat bolt upright. In the dark she saw dimly a man, a man whose outlines were strangely familiar, bending over her husband's head with something in his hand.

The man raised his arm, she heard a click. The next minute she rolled from the bed screaming. The bullet meant for her crashed through a window opposite. The first bullet, the crash of which had awakened her from a deep sleep, had gone through her husband's head.

This was the story that Mrs. Lillie had told when the neighbors in answer to her screams had poured into the house.

The Arrest of the Dressmaker.

For some time after that she seemed to be dazed and when she was questioned her answers aroused suspicion.

Suddenly to the surprise of every one, to the anguish of her family and the consternation of her patrons, she was arrested on a charge of murder. All sorts of conflicting stories were told about her having speculated in stocks, about her having had a quarrel with her husband, about her wanting his life insurance. And the end of it all was she was clapped into the county jail.

Every one of her patrons was up in arms. They said it was outrageous. Not a single woman among them believed her guilty, and besides they thought it a perfect shame to arrest her just when she was beginning to take an interest in dressmaking again. She actually had some of their gowns begun in her house, all cut out and ready to make. And there was one thing about Mrs. Lillie, it was absolutely impossible to get any one else to finish a gown that she had begun. No one else could quite seem to grasp how she intended to finish it. It was really like finishing a tale someone else has begun—absolutely impossible to finish it in the same style.

The women of Nebraska were in despair, but the prosecuting attorney didn't seem to take their feelings the least bit in the world to account. He went on prosecuting.

For almost two years Mrs. Lillie was in the county jail at David City, while her trial was delayed and postponed, only to be delayed and postponed again.

During all that time her patrons remained faithful to her. They had their gowns, it is true, made up by other dressmakers, some of them sent their orders East, but they all declared that they were longing for the day when Mrs. Lillie should be free.

That day never came. Instead came the frightful day when she was pronounced guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Resumes Business in Cell No. 63.

Broken down, pale, disheartened, a wreck of her former self, Mrs. Lillie was removed to the State Penitentiary at Lincoln, Nebraska, there to begin her life sentence.

Mrs. Beemer, the kind hearted wife of the warden, did everything she could to rouse her. But the strain of two years of agony, two years of doubt and suspense, had so told upon the prisoner that she seemed on the verge of a complete collapse. Her little daughter Edna, just old enough to be stung by the glances and slights of her companions, had gone with her grandparents to Southern California to live on a little farm there, far away from all who might look at her askance.

Mrs. Lillie was growing paler and thinner day by day. She seemed to be literally wasting away. Good-hearted Mrs. Beemer was in despair when suddenly an idea came to her. Here was a prisoner, who must have work, work that was congenial to her.

The women of Arizona, headed by the Federation of Women's Clubs, had already taken up the case of Mrs. Lillie, but while they were working for her acquittal or pardon Mrs. Beemer feared her prisoner might die. So one day she took matters in her own hands and went about among the dressmaker's former patrons.

"Would you if she would consent?" she asked.

"Would I? Well, I wouldn't hesitate a minute. As long as my gown fits I don't care if it is fitted in a cell or in a parlor."

Mrs. Beemer made the rounds. She went to one woman after the other, and one and all declared they would rather have Mrs. Lillie sew for them than any one else they knew.

So it was arranged. The pale little woman sitting disconsolate in a corner of her cell, brooding over her fate, protesting her innocence when she spoke at all, was suddenly informed that Mrs. This One and Mrs. That One were waiting to see her about gowns that they would like her to make as soon as possible. Would she please set to work at once?

Would she? At first the poor prisoner looked as if she were losing her mind. Then she sprang to her feet and cried out: "Make things! Sew again. Cut out beautiful materials for beautiful women! Oh, may I? May I?"

She was assured that every possible facility for making and fitting would be accorded her.

"I shall feel that I am in the world again, doing something that will live there, be seen there, even if I am guarded behind prison walls."

At first her former patrons had some slight misgivings, it must be confessed. They wondered, for instance, if she might not have lost some of her skill, and if, with her long incarceration, she might not have lost her instinct for style. They went to her a little timidly. But after one or two trials they found her better than ever, more eager, more alert, more absolutely absorbed in her efforts to make them beautiful.

Having absolutely nothing in the world to distract her attention, she labors with her whole heart and soul thinking only of the work in hand. And thus she is even better than ever.

Her fame from within the prison walls has spread again from end to end of the State. Mrs. Lillie, the dressmaker, is at work again, but not at the old stand. She is working behind prison bars to make enough money to support her child. Half of all she earns goes to Edna and half to the fund for the finding of the man who she believes killed her husband.

This man, she declares, was known to be inimical to Mr. Lillie. Immediately after the murder he disappeared and has never been seen in that region of the country since.

Mrs. Lillie's defenders say there was absolutely no reason for her to kill her husband. Her affairs were in a most prosperous condition. He was doing well in business and so was she.

She declares that he was robbed, for she remembers that he brought home with him the night of his murder a large sum of money for safe keeping. That money could never be found afterward.

Hundreds of women have signed a petition asking for a new trial for Mrs. Lillie, and meanwhile they provide her with the work she loves.

"Artistic dressmaking," is a novel sign within the walls of a prison, but such a one hangs in the rooms of the warden's wife, to announce that Mrs. Yeta Margaret Lillie, dressmaker, is at work again.

WOMAN'S TRUE MISSION IN LIFE. BY CARMEN SYLVA, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

ALIKE in the natural and the spiritual world, the true vocation of woman is simply motherhood. This I am convinced is her high calling, with which she may well rest content.

But it has come to pass of late that women strive to manifest their mental powers in other kinds of work. The material aspect of life has grown more complicated in our day, and it is a great pity that we cannot return to the simplicity of former times.

After all, country life would always be the true ideal; to pass one's days peacefully on one's own land, whose produce would suffice for simple, wholesome food, to allow the style of one's own dress to be regulated by one's own artistic taste and regard for health and comfort than by the dictates of fashion and undisturbed by the bustle and noise of the crowd.

What a contrast to this idyllic picture does the world at this moment present, with people living herded together in great cities, and cooped up in monstrous overcrowded houses within narrow streets, where they can hardly drink in a breath of fresh air or see a leaf growing, but where each one, instead of giving his thoughts to higher things, is generally busied with his neighbor's affairs.

How fair this world might yet become under the beneficent sway of women of high breeding and noble culture did they but earnestly give up their whole souls to the task of making their influence felt to the most remote circles.

But the women of the present day seem determined to descend from their lofty pedestal. Is it possible that they will not perceive, ere it be too late, their fatal and irretrievable error?

Women should never forget that they stand on a superior level, and when they place themselves on an equality with man they do but descend from those heights. It is the natural instinct of man to venerate woman, first in the person of the mother who bore him, next in that of his wife, then again of the daughter or it may be of the sister or sisterly friend who watches over his children.

It is not too much to say, that in all times and places, and under all circumstances whatsoever, a truly womanly woman will hardly fail to obtain proper deference from men.

And if the latter sometimes assume too lordly an air toward the weaker sex, that is perhaps altogether unintentional. For men are in some respects like children, who are quite unconsciously the greatest tyrants to those they love best. In the same way, in the hour of trouble, in sickness and fatigue, our husbands and our sons seem to us just such dear spoilt children whom we must do our best to help and comfort, however inordinate the claims may be which they make on our sympathy and indulgence.

Oh, if women would but learn that they are here not to be understood but to understand others, that herein lies a great part of their mission upon earth!

Men rarely understand the nature of women. Their own sentiments are much less complex and less highly elaborated, and they seldom have time or inclination to study the delicate, intricate machinery of a woman's soul. A man is generally satisfied, when he returns home tired after the day's work, to find a comfortable fireside awaiting him. He fancies the simple, honest affection he gives his wife ought to content her also, and he certainly will not trouble his head about any deeper psychological problem involved.

Every woman should remain more or less of a sphinx even to her own husband so that he may always find in her some new riddle to solve.

HOW RADIUM AND BOUILLON HAVE REVEALED AT LAST THE SECRET OF LIFE

ONE of the Profoundest Mysteries of the Creation of Mankind Cleared Away by a Simple Little Experiment with Some Beef Broth in a Test Tube.

Dr. John Butler Burke.

HAVE we learned how to create life? Dr. John Butler Burke, of Cambridge University, England, really seems to have accomplished this miracle of miracles.

He is not dogmatic about it. He makes no extravagant claims. As becomes a scientific man of eminence, he is conservative. All that he says in summing up an explanation of his discovery is that "living forms seem to have been produced from sterile boulllon by exposing the latter to the action of radium."

But is not that wonderful enough? Life produced by artificial means! The very idea staggers the mind. It opens up an immense field of future possibilities.

Recognizing in the newly discovered element radium a "semi-living substance," as he calls it, highly excitable and containing a vast store of energy, Dr. Burke thought it would be worth while to see if any perceptible efforts followed the application of this substance to a culture stuff such as bacteria grows upon so rapidly. Such culture stuff, of course, is merely a highly nutritious food; bouillon (beef broth) serves excellently for the purpose, and milk is a natural culture stuff.

Dr. Burke chose bouillon—an extract of meat diluted with distilled water, mixed with gelatine to stiffen it, and with a little salt and pepsin added. He put some of this into a glass tube, and then heated it until all living germs that it may have contained were necessarily dead. In other words, the contents of the tube were rendered absolutely "sterile" and devoid of life.

The tube, however, did contain something else—namely, a small bubble of glass, holding just a tiny bit of radium. When the sterilization had been made complete, the bubble was broken by shaking the tube, and the radium was thus brought into contact with the bouillon.

After a few days the doctor examined the tube, and, to his surprise something seemed to have happened. When he inspected the bouillon through a powerful microscope surprise was exchanged for astonishment, inasmuch as a growth somewhat resembling a culture of bacteria had developed. In other words, little colonies of what looked like living organisms had appeared on the surface of the bouillon—aggregations of microbes (if such they could be termed) varying in size from minutest specks to a twentieth of an inch in diameter!

Something must be wrong about the experiment, Dr. Burke thought. The sterilization could not have been complete. So he tried it over again, and yet again and again. In every case the result was the same; similar colonies were observed in every instance, and as they grew and developed, it was observed that the larger organisms (if such they were) showed visible nuclei. Later on, at the end of a fortnight or three weeks, having reached a certain stage of growth, they subdivided.

It was almost too wonderful to be believed. The Doctor, with true scientific conservatism, refused to call the alleged organisms "microbes." Crystals they could not be. That they lived seemed undeniable. They have been named radiorobes, and under that title they now figure as the latest and greatest of modern marvels. Their discoverer has already photographed them, but they must be looked at through the microscope in order to observe the unmistakable signs of growth and segregation which they exhibit. "Possibly a primitive form of life," is all the Doctor will say about them.

Life Produced Artificially.

The problem of spontaneous generation, then, has been solved at last—the problem, that is to say, of creating living forms out of inorganic and non-living matter! It is the accomplishment of what has hitherto been deemed the impossible.

No wonder that the scientific world at large was disposed at first to receive the news of the discovery with incredulity. And yet it was only a short time ago that Sir Oliver Lodge, president of the University of Birmingham, England, said: "People must not be surprised if something is done in the laboratory which may be properly considered to be of the nature of spontaneous generation." In the light of the almost immediate fulfilment of his words, this statement must be regarded as a truly remarkable prophecy.

Many years ago the great Huxley said: "It would be highly presumptuous to say that the conditions under which matter assumes the properties known as vital may not be artificially brought together."

"So far," wrote Sir Oliver Lodge a few months ago, "all efforts at spontaneous generation have been failures—possibly because some essential ingredient or condition was omitted; possibly for the reason that a great length of time was requisite.

"Supposing it successful," he adds, "what then? We should merely be reproducing in the laboratory a process that must at some past age have occurred on the earth. For at one time the earth was certainly hot, molten and necessarily devoid of life. Whence, then, came originally the life with which to-day the planet swarms?"

At the beginning the earth must have been absolutely sterile and lifeless, like the bouillon in Dr. Burke's glass tube. There was no organic matter, vegetable or animal; everything was inorganic. How, then, was organic creation started? In what way did the first life come to be? Some spontaneous generation there must have been—unless one is to accept Lord Kelvin's rather wild theory to the effect that life was introduced upon the earth by meteorites falling from the sky. But even were such a notion accepted, it would account for the transfer, and not for the origin of living forms.

What is life?

"Perhaps," says Sir Oliver Lodge, "it may be something ultra-terrestrial. It may be immaterial—something, indeed, quite outside of any category of which we as yet conceive; not less real, perhaps, but different.

"All we know is that it vitalises things—that it utilises the energies of these things to display itself amid terrestrial surroundings; and then seems to disappear and evaporate. Does it go back to the place or source from which it came? It is perpetually arriving and perpetually disappearing. Where does it come from and whither does it depart?

Life From the Dust.

"Perhaps it represents a contact between the material frame of things and a universe higher and other than anything known to our senses—a universe not dominated by physics or chemistry, but utilising the interactions of matter for its own purposes; a universe where the human spirit is more at home than here; a universe capable of infinite development, of noble contemplation, and of lofty joy, long after this planet—nay, the whole solar system—shall have fulfilled its present destiny and sunk into a lifelessness final and eternal."

To return from this speculative and philosophical flight to the main subject under discussion, it may be appropriate to quote another physiologist of eminence, Dr. Edward Clodd, of England, who says: "The manifest intimate connection between vital and electrical phenomena is all in favor of the validity of Dr. Burke's conclusions."

In order that this remark may be fully understood, and its significance grasped, one should remember the wonderful experiments made by Dr. Jacques Loeb, professor of physiology in the University of California, who recently announced that the energy of the nervous system of a human being or any other living creature—that is to say, the driving power that runs the body machine—is nothing more or less than electricity.

"How does your discovery affect religion and the dogmas of the theologians?" Dr. Burke was asked.

"We must leave that question for the theologists to decide," he replied. "Naturally, I have thought about it somewhat, but I can only say that it seems to me merely to add further evidence in behalf of the theory of the continuity of nature—that is, of the widespread extension of its laws, covering the inorganic as well as the organic world. If this is really life that has been produced by my experiments, it is the outcome of inorganic substances—a springing of life from what is lifeless.

"To attempt to discuss the original first cause is hopeless and beyond the scope of scientific investigation; but, should my experiments prove the possibility of spontaneous generation, the principle is not at all in opposition to the conception of the universe as ruled by an Almighty Creator. On the contrary, if it can be shown that dust and earth are capable of producing life, the clerical fraternity itself should be the first to perceive in this discovery a confirmation of the truth of Holy Writ.

A Legacy for Posterity.

"Such a possibility, obviously, cannot be proved in our time through experiments of the kind in which I have been engaged because the radio-activity of dust and earth is so small that it might take thousands of years to produce life. For the sake of trying it, however, I intend to leave a legacy of a few pounds in money, which will enable a remote posterity to test the truth of the theory. With this end in view, I shall prepare some tubes in the same way I have prepared those utilised in my recent experiments. They will contain bouillon and will be carefully sterilised at a temperature above boiling point, under high pressure, for half an hour. But, instead of radium, they will contain simply a small quantity of earth.

"These tubes I propose to place in some museum—probably the British Museum—with instructions to the effect that they shall be opened at intervals, one at a time, hundreds or thousands of years apart. Possibly they may yield interesting and valuable results; anyway, the trial is worth making."

Dr. Loeb's experiments with the eggs of sea urchins and certain other animals, by which he was able to dispense altogether with one parent and yet to produce living and apparently healthy young, have already been made familiar to the public. By the use of various chemical solutions he has succeeded in fertilising artificially the ova of echinoderms, and also those of clams and mussels, actually hatching from them swimming larvae, which, though fatherless, show no lack of vitality on that account. Indeed, it has been found that a strong solution of common salt or a weak solution of vinegar acid will accomplish the purpose.

These are indeed days of epoch-making discoveries. No sooner does one marvel come to light than another is piled on top of it. Dr. Loeb got rid of one parent; Dr. Burke dispenses with both, the children of the radium having neither father nor mother.

How Long You May Live.

In conclusion, inasmuch as you cannot expect your own life to continue always, you may find it interesting to figure out your own expectation of survival—that is to say, the number of years you may reasonably consider that you have ahead of you.

You may get at this in a rough way by subtracting your present age from 86 and dividing the remainder by two. The result will be the number of years you have to live. Thus, if you are forty, you have an expectation of surviving twenty-three years. More acurately speaking:

At birth you may expect to live forty-four years.

At five years of age you may expect to live fifty-nine years more.

At ten years of age you may expect to live forty-nine years more.

At fifteen you may expect to live forty-four years more.

At twenty you may expect to live forty years more.

At twenty-five you may expect to live thirty-six years more.

At thirty you may expect to live thirty-two years more.

At thirty-five you may expect to live twenty-nine years more.

At forty you may expect to live twenty-five years more.

At forty-five you may expect to live twenty-two years more.

At fifty you may expect to live nineteen years more.

At fifty-five you may expect to live seventeen years more.

At sixty you may expect to live thirteen years more.

At sixty-five you may expect to live ten years more.

At seventy you may expect to live eight years more.

At seventy-five you may expect to live six years more.

At eighty you may expect to live four and a half years more.

At eighty-five you may expect to live three and a third years more.

At ninety you may expect to live two and a half years more.

At ninety-five you may expect to live less than two years more.

At one hundred you may expect to live one year more.

These, of course, represent the average case. Your own personal expectation may be better, or not so good.

IF YOU EVER MEET A BURGLAR!—Here Are Some of

EVERYBODY has speculated more or less on what he or she would most probably do in case of being suddenly confronted by a burglar. Different people have faced the predicament in different ways—by pretending to be asleep, by hiding under the bedclothes, by screaming for help, by seeking safety in flight or by tackling the burglar.

The last named is not always the wisest method, particularly if the burglar is big and muscular and well armed and you are not. But as the average housebreaker dreads a personal encounter and does not prowl around with a dark lantern in one hand and a revolver in the other, it is generally safe to assume that he will be more afraid of you than you should be of him.

With that much understood, the next thing to be considered is just how to treat Mr. Burglar when you meet him. Many valuable suggestions on this subject are embodied in an excellent volume just compiled by H. Irving Hancock and Katsukuma Higashi and published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, under the title, "The Complete Kano Jiu-Jitsu." The book is illustrated with over 500 photographs and charts illustrating the most scientific methods of disposing of an assailant and of bringing him back to his senses later.

The photographs reproduced herewith illustrate some of the most effective ways in which you can throw your assailant, or break his arm or strangle him into submission as the occasion demands.

In order to thoroughly master the tricks of the Kano system shown herewith it is necessary to study them closely and to practise them carefully until every point is perfectly understood.

It is claimed for the Kano Jiu-Jitsu system of attack and defence that not only is it possible to kill an adversary outright, but also to restore him to life afterward.

"The criticism has been made," says Mr. Higashi in explanation, "that since we are able to restore those whom we kill, we do not really kill at all, but merely 'knock out' our victims. This is a very natural error on the part of Occidental readers. Our more serious tricks do kill, because they stop every vital process of life. A man killed by one of our more serious tricks could not be restored to life by any of the

If he seizes you around the waist, throw your right arm around his neck. Then with the back of your right knee kick at the back of his right knee, forcing him to sit down backward very suddenly. Your victim will fall as shown.

If you find the burglar is a very muscular chap, seize his wrists. Twist suddenly around, crossing his wrists. Then pull both of his arms over your shoulder, suddenly bend forward and throw him.

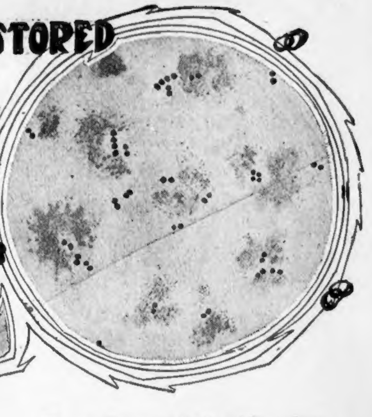
DEATH DEFEATED AND LIFE ACTUALLY RESTORED BY AMAZING SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERIES

HOW Science Is Preparing to Make Everybody Live Forever by Removing All Natural Causes of Death and by Even Restoring the Dead to Life.

Restoring a Dead Man to Life by Injecting a Salt Solution Into the Muscular Tissues.



Microscopic Photograph of Parasites and Disease Germs Which Cause Cessation of Life.

WHY should we ever die?

Professor Albert P. Mathews, who is a famous scientific man and a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago, says that there is no reason why we should do so, if only we understood a little more about the make-up of our bodies. If we are not immortal, it is simply for lack of knowledge.

Of course, there are certain causes of death, to be classified in a general way as external, which cannot always be avoided—such, for example, as automobile accidents, violent assaults and the taking of poisons. In this category should be included even the germs of diseases, inasmuch as they enter the body from outside and are liable to destroy it. All of these "extrinsic" causes, however, are being reduced to a minimum by the efforts of an intelligent civilization, and already, as a result, the duration of the average human life has been increased (within the last quarter of a century) by at least ten years.

Death is the arch enemy of us all, and no human being as yet has ever been able to escape the sweep of his scythe. But it is possible to fight him off—to postpone his approach, if not indefinitely, at least for a considerable time. Ten years added to the average human life is in itself no trifle, and science, by this discovery and that, is steadily making the term of our existence longer and longer.

Think what modern surgery is doing to prolong life! Consider how safe we are rendered against a multitude of diseases, comparatively speaking, by our knowledge of the germs that cause them and of the means by which they may be avoided or destroyed.

The next and most important thing to be done, according to Professor Mathews, is to study and remove the causes of death which lie within the tissues of the body itself. People die, he says, mainly because something interferes with the welfare of the little cells which compose the community called the body; and, the cells dissolving their partnership, the life of the individual comes to an end. These cells are constantly suffering from improper nourishment and incomplete excretion. You do not know how to give them just the food they require, and, mainly in consequence of this fact, they cannot get rid entirely of the substances formed by them. Result: Cell indigestion and poisoning.

We are not yet familiar with the chemical processes going on in the various tissues of our bodies. Therefore, we do not know exactly what they need in the way of food or how much they require. Our eating is purely experimental. Until we know precisely what the different tissues need, we must continue, as at present, to give one tissue too much, too little or not quite the right food. Consequently, this tissue sooner or later gets sick, quits work and, failing to perform its proper function, ruins the rest of the body. The victim, after undergoing much suffering perhaps, perishes.

Now, before going further, it may be permissible to ask if you were ever dead?

Probably you think not. But did you ever take enough laughing gas or ether to make you completely unconscious? If so, you have, so to speak, known what it is to be dead. You came to life again, but for a while you were as dead as if you had been six feet underground in a cemetery lot.

As to what actually constitutes death science to-day is disposed to take a view quite different from that formerly held on the subect. If you ask, "When does a man die?" the answer, necessarily, must depend upon the point of view from which you regard the phenomenon. If you refer merely to his body, the only correct reply is that it dies piecemeal, one organ after another ceasing to perform its function. On the other hand, if you mean his personality, this evidently disappears when he loses consciousness. In this sense, indeed, you are to some extent dead when you fall into a deep slumber.

Sleep, then, is in no merely figurative sense the "sister of death," and, as we fall into the agreeable unconsciousness of slumber, we are imitating closely, though in a painless manner, the sensations experienced by a person in dying. A curious reflection, is it not?

Now, it would seem that science, while removing the causes of death—or, when not removing them, postponing their operation—has actually found out how to restore life. That is to say, it has learned how to call back the dead from beyond the line on the further side of which lies the great and grim mystery of the Beyond.

Dead Restored to Life.

Only the other day this wonder was accomplished in St. Louis, where an unfortunate and discouraged person named Peter Eidam fired a pistol bullet through his own body. He was taken to the City Hospital and two doctors pronounced him dead. There can be no doubt of the fact that he really was dead; his heart had ceased to beat for five minutes, and the corpse was ready for a pauper's burial. But a third physician, just for the sake of experiment, took a notion to try to revive the defunct by injecting a solution of salt into his veins and by promoting artificial respiration. Lo! a miracle: the man who had been dead came to life again, and at last accounts he was rapidly recovering.

Under experimental conditions the hearts of animals have been made to beat for hours after they had ceased to breathe: their muscles in such circumstances have continued to twitch when stimulated by electricity, and their nerves have been capable of carrying impulses corresponding to sense impressions. The flesh of a turtle, chopped into small pieces, will continue to quiver, owing to liberation of nervous energy, for many hours. If the chest of a dog be opened and the heart taken in the hand and rhythmically squeezed the animal will begin to breathe—in fact, will manifest unmistakable signs of life, though already dead for quite a while. By causing blood to circulate through it the heart of a man has been made to beat outside of his body.

The weight of a dead body does not differ in the slightest amount from the weight of the same body just before respiration ceases. The death process is not, therefore, accompanied by the loss of any material substance. What is it that departs when life goes? Nobody in the present state of human knowledge is even able to surmise. So far as appearances indicate, nothing goes; the machine simply ceases to work.

"But at the bottom of all the phenomena of life," says Professor Mathews, "there is one thing fundamental—namely, breathing. Living matter, as long as it is alive, breathes. That is to say, it continually consumes oxygen and gives off carbon dioxide. All other functions depend upon this. Life, we may say, depends upon the continuance of this process in all the tissues of the body. UNDER PERFECT CONDITIONS IT SHOULD CONTINUE INDEFINITELY, AND WE SHOULD BE IMMORTAL."

That we die seems, in the opinion of Professor Mathews, to be chiefly due to the fact that we do not know what and how much food we ought to eat. The tissues get sick; the cells stop breathing and we perish. WE DIE, in truth, of SELF-POISONING. The only remedy, in the present state of our knowledge, is carefulness and moderation in eating.

How and Why We Die.

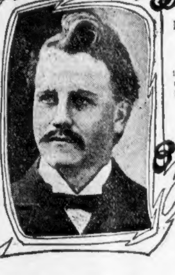
If (to illustrate Professor Mathews's theory) the arteries are fed with too much calcium, or chalk-stuff, they are liable to become brittle. Some day, perhaps, one of them breaks, and then there is danger. If it is a blood vessel in the brain that is ruptured, the unfortunate person falls down unconscious, and the doctor, looking grave, says "apoplexy." But back of the whole mischief lies the fact of wrong diet. If the man had eaten less chalk-stuff, maybe he would have escaped the attack.

Some day, perhaps, we may become so wise that we shall be able to go right along living for an indefinite period, like the infusorians.

Do you know what an infusorian is? Well, tea, as you are aware, is an infusion, prepared by soaking the leaves in water. In the same way you may obtain an infusion of hay, or of any other dried plant stuff, and after a while, if you examine the fluid under a microscope, you will find that a single drop of it contains many tiny creatures, each of them consisting of only a single cell, which nevertheless possesses power of locomotion and unmistakable consciousness. These infusorians are not plants, like the bacteria, but animals of a very low—the lowest known—grade.

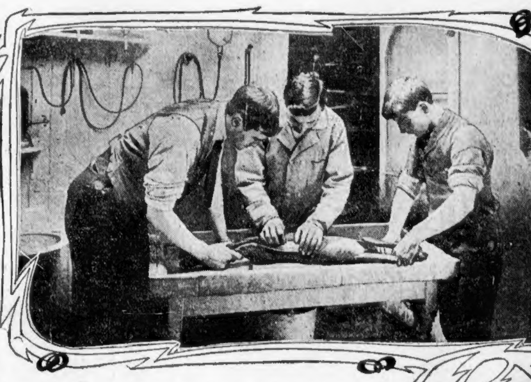


Professor Albert P. Mathews.

However, they appear to possess one gift which we who stand at the top of the ladder of life may well envy—namely, the gift of immortality. Under favorable conditions they seem to be able to prolong their existence indefinitely, if not forever.

But who can say that, with sufficient knowledge gained, we ourselves may not be able in the future to do likewise? Of course, unending life would be of less than no use to us if the uncomfortable and unbeautiful symptoms of advancing age could not be checked; but there again we are able to derive hope from this humble organism, which appears to renew its youth at intervals and begin all over again in the business of living.

The generally accepted notion that death comes when breathing stops is a gross error, derived from the ancient belief, long ago exploded, that life is drawn in with the breath, and that with the last breath the soul passes out of the body. As a matter of fact, there is no definite moment of death. Stoppage of breathing does not mark the passing of life, though it is the cause of death, inasmuch as the body cannot survive without air. The supply of oxygen cut off, the tissues perish of suffocation. But a man's heart may continue to beat for many minutes after he has ceased to breathe, and it has already been shown that, even when that organ has discontinued its action for a considerable time, the man may be brought back out of the jaws of Pallida Mors.



Bringing a Dog Back to Life After the Heart Has Stopped Beating and Respiration Has Ceased.

When you are awakened from deep sleep it is a kind of resuscitation, equivalent in a certain degree to the bringing back of a dead person to life. If you are a good sleeper it is interesting to consider that you spend one-third of your life in the arms of a species of death.

Gradually Dying for Years.

For sleep is really a pretty fair imitation of death. In slumber your breathing becomes slower, and the amount of air you take into your lungs is diminished to about one-seventh of the normal quantity inspired during your waking moments. The heart, too, beats more slowly and less vigorously, the pulse slackening proportionately. At the same time the brain—as proved by the study of persons in whom skull wounds gave opportunity for observation—shrinks and grows pale, the blood flowing out of it to other parts of the body.

If the body is the man, then the death of the body is the death of the man: it wipes him out finally and altogether. But to such a conclusion we have a strong and instinctive antipathy. Nobody likes to contemplate extinction either for himself or for his friends. And, in the opinion of Professor Mathews, when we consider how little we really know about this wonderful universe in which we dwell, it is obvious that there is plenty of room for an hypothesis of immortality in the hereafter.

Meanwhile we should realize that death is with most of us by no means so sudden an event as is generally imagined. All of us who have passed the prime of life are gradually dying. The cells of our muscular and other useful tissues are not being renewed as fast as they die; the various organs of our bodies are undergoing a progressive and more or less rapid degeneration. After a while one or more of them will cease to work, and then we shall be compelled, however unwillingly, to stop living.

the Very Astonishing Things You Can Easily Do to Him!

methods known to the medical profession. But by Kuatsu, which is based on a knowledge of the natural laws of anatomy and physiology, as gained by our adepts after many centuries of study, it is possible to set the vital forces in operation again by mechanical means. Kuatsu, however, must be applied immediately after the victim succumbs."

All of this is very interesting to know. Probably no other nation except the Japanese would have ever conceived the idea of scientifically killing a man by tapping him on a negative vital spot and then bringing him back to life again by tapping him on another positive vital spot.

In Japan only the most advanced pupils are initiated into the mysteries of the most secret and deadly tricks of Kano Jiu-Jitsu, and their practice is always under the watchful eye of a skilled instructor, who is versed in the ways of Kuatsu, the particular branch of jiu-jitsu which deals with the restoration of a contestant who has been rendered unconscious, or apparently killed.

In Messrs. Hancock and Higashi's newest volume a carefully prepared chapter on Kuatsu will be presented. It is even suggested that this restorative science should be carefully studied by laymen and physicians alike, for, with a knowledge of the newest Japanese methods of resuscitation, it will be possible to save many lives that are now lost through accidental causes. The methods of Kuatsu are efficacious in cases of sunstroke and drowning, for instance, where ordinary medical means may fail.

Many over-timorous persons have urged against the jiu-jitsu the stigma of the "foul blow." There are many dangerous blows that are struck in boxing, which, however, prohibits blows below the belt. As there are so many dangerous blows that may be struck above the belt, it can be supposed only that the boxer has restricted the area with which dangerous blows may be struck only in order that he may have the fewer points to guard against attack. The jiu-jitsu man inflicts no injury that, it is claimed, he cannot promptly repair by means of Kuatsu. On the other hand, the boxer not infrequently strikes a blow that kills the opponent and is compelled to stand helplessly by and watch his victim drifting into another life.

Several of the simplest ways in which Kuatsu may be used will be photographically explained in another article to appear next Sunday.

If the burglar seizes you, thrust your arm inside of his and seize him at the back of the neck. Thrust your left arm between his legs, seizing him at the back of the left leg. Drop swiftly to your right knee and push the top of your head against his chest. Bend forward, pulling on your victim's collar and on his left leg, and over he goes.

In case you are seized around the body from the rear, quickly thrust your left leg back of your assailant's right leg. Keep the burglar's waist on your left leg and throw him.

If the burglar rushes at you, drop on one knee, but advancing the foot of the other leg. At the same time grasp your assailant's legs just back of the knees and lift him with your head. The burglar, as he goes over your back, will throw one hand to the floor in an effort to save himself.

3 Extraordinary Romances - For Pure Love - To Please a King Tho' It Breaks Her Heart - To Raise Beautiful Children

A Millionaire Scientist Hires the Prettiest Peasant Girl in Rus a to Marry the Handsomest Man to Test His Plan of Breeding a Race of More and ore Beautiful People

MOSCOW, June 23.

EARLY in August, when Miss Vera Strellitz marries Maxim Sakharoff, the second step will be taken in one of the most curiously interesting experiments ever devised by man. Miss Vera is the prettiest peasant girl in Russia, and young Sakharoff is the handsomest, finest masculine specimen to be found. Their engagement and marriage has been planned for the purpose of producing children which it is hoped will be more splendidly beautiful than even their father and mother.

The moving genius behind this unusual romance is M. Rachatnikoff, a very rich Russian land owner near Moscow. He is a scientist and a devoted believer in Darwin's theory of special selection. M. Rachatnikoff has conducted many experiments in breeding fowls, dogs and cattle, selecting always the biggest, handsomest specimens to mate. In this way he has produced some remarkable products.

About twenty years ago M. Rachatnikoff determined to apply his beliefs to some practical tests with men and women. He decided to try to breed a race of especially beautiful human beings. In accordance with his scheme he searched the neighboring provinces for young women of exceptional beauty and induced them to come and live on his estates. At the same time he collected several magnificent specimens of physical manhood and settled them on his land. At first these young people were inclined to select their own mates but M. Rachatnikoff had certain scientific points to demonstrate, and he was anxious to mate the couples according to his own ideas. By a series of handsome rewards the wealthy land owner was able to accomplish largely what he had in mind.

Every Human Perfection Represented.

M. Rachatnikoff succeeded in uniting a husband with large eyes with a wife of especially big, lustrous eyes for the purpose of producing offspring with even larger, finer eyes than either. And the girl with the most exquisitely formed lips and chin was married to an Apollo who possessed these same features in greatest perfection. Thus, among the fifty couples who have been mated under the scientific guidance of their wealthy patron every perfection of feature and physical charm has been united with a view to producing even greater perfection in their children.

To add every advantage to these couples they have been surrounded with an atmosphere of happiness and contentment. The work given them has purposely been light and the personal preferences of all have been consulted in assigning their various tasks about the great estates. Especial care has been given to their food and the sanitary conditions of their homes.

To escape the production of a race of empty-headed beauties with no gleam of intellect in their eyes, M. Rachatnikoff has provided a college professor from a St. Petersburg college to live among them as a friend and teacher. While many of the men and women are quite competent to do clerical or office work M. Rachatnikoff has preferred to keep them busy with outdoor employment, paying them much more than farm wages. The open air life, the land-owner believes, is a more advantageous one for the purpose in view.

One Hundred and Fifty Fine Children.

This selected colony has already raised some 150 children and the fame of their exceptional beauty has spread throughout all Russia. And it is the first wedding among these children that is soon to be celebrated.

M. Rachatnikoff himself arranged the betrothal of Miss Vera Strellitz with young Sakharoff. The bride is nineteen and the groom twenty; both are brunettes and each one is a marvellously fine specimen of beauty and perfect physique. In each of these young people the theory of special selection has been abundantly demonstrated, for each possesses in more marked degree the physical perfections of their parents. And it is with eager anticipation that M. Rachatnikoff awaits the birth of their children, hoping to reach in them a still more marvellous type of human beauty.

M. Rachatnikoff has prepared a wedding present for this couple as a reward for their loyal obedience to his wishes and plans. He has built a pretty cottage in the midst of a well-stocked farm and has added every necessary farming tool. In addition to this he has arranged for a handsome birthday present for the endowment of each child as soon as it is born.

M. Rachatnikoff is determined to have his scheme of selected beauty continue on after his death and he has arranged his will to this effect. He believes that another fifty years of his colony will have developed such a race of radiant beauty that municipalities and state governments will take up the project on broader lines.

M. Rachatnikoff's beauty colony has already spread its influence. Some years ago the distinguished Frenchman, Count Alfred Saint-Ouen de Pierrecourt, while traveling in Russia, met M. Rachatnikoff and visited his estates. He was greatly impressed with the unquestionable results of breeding by special selection and, returning to France, determined to carry on similar experiments. But the Count de Pierrecourt decided to attempt to breed a race of enormously tall human beings without regard to beauty. Before his plans could be put into execution he died, but he provided in his will for the carrying out of his plans. After long litigation in the courts the Count's disgusted relatives have been beaten and the validity of the will has recently been established.

Breeding a Race of Giants.

By the provisions of the Count de Pierrecourt's will the city of Rouen, France, becomes charged with the duty of trying to breed a race of human giants.

The Count's will requires that a dowry of $20,000 be given to four couples of giants each year who can fulfil certain physical conditions. The woman need only be six feet four inches tall and the man can qualify at six feet six inches.

If this were the only condition the estate would be overwhelmed with qualified candidates. But another requirement demands that they come already married and produce at least one proof of their ability to raise young giants, for the Count had no interest in the giants themselves except as producers of a real stock of giants, twelve-footers or more, to be bred in the future.

This requirement has caused no end of correspondence among elephantine individuals and disclosed a fact hitherto unobserved. A sort of professional jealousy among the phenomenally tall seems to keep them apart and when they married or made close friendships it was usually with common-sized people.

For this reason few gigantic couples exist who can [illegible] offspring. The count's will is changing all this. Giants and gi[illegible] are corresponding, ardent courtships and even marri[illegible] have already resulted. People with the match-making fever [illegible] the footsteps of every overgrown person of either sex they [illegible] counter and try to bring about a union that will win a Pie[illegible] prize. The Rachatnikoff beauty colony is conducted on broader theories. The Frenchman, grieving that his race should be so small, [illegible] in view the cultivation of giants. The Russian expects to [illegible] a perfect race, which shall be incidentally larger than present mankind.

Count de Saint-Ouen de Pierrecourt, who was considerably more than six feet tall, traced his ancestry back to those old feudal houses in France whose sons and daughters were permitted to marry none but gigantic mates. As a result of this practice, which was kept up for several hundred years, these provincial nobles proudly towered above all their contemporaries.

Rachatnikoff is a firm follower of Darwin, and in deference to the law of natural selection he determined first of all to make his new race beautiful so that they would naturally love each other and not some interloping outsider.

An entire wing of the Rachatnikoff mansion is filled with skeletons, casts and illustrations of various types of men and anthropoid apes from our ancestor of the stone age down to the races of to-day. Every book or article written on the subject of man's origin or development has found its way into another wing.

In still another the walls are covered with ancient Egyptian, Chaldean, Chinese and Indian carvings of the human figure. Twenty Egyptian mummies occupy one room. Priceless fragments and casts of Greek statuary adorn another. Between the two rooms is a third in which fourteen human skeletons, complete in every bone, stand on their frames. These represent the seven varieties of the human species who are strongly represented in Russia.

Playing Chess with Bones.

To see Rachatnikoff at his daily labors one would think him at work building a "Frankenstein." Out of all his assortments of bones he tries combination after combination, putting the mixed skeletons together on a special setting-up device of his own invention. The head of a Japanese on the spine of an Englishman, with the ribs of a Dane, the hips and thighs of a negro and the feet and lower legs of an American sprinter whose body was lost in the Spanish-American war, formed one of his combinations.

In all this work Rachatnikoff has been planning out the proportions of his perfect future Russian. He has not the slightest doubt that in a few generations an approximation to his ideal can be reached in the way of measurements and looks. Of course, he will be dead and gone, but his estate and instructions will cause the work to go on.

When the colony boasts several hundred of both sexes who are close to his theoretically perfect human being, the new race will be bred with an eye to longevity. When the average of one hundred years is reached this will stop and the breeding from that time on will be wholly for intellectual qualities.

All these qualities are already being looked out for in a minor way. None but healthy specimens of long-lived stock are accepted. Freedom from superstition or religious fanaticism is also required.

The final outcome, Rachatnikoff believes, will be a mighty, handsome, healthy, long-lived race of marvellous intellect, which will become the upper or ruling race of Russia and the whole world. Many of the greatest races of antiquity had an upper and lower race, both of the same stock apparently, yet very different in build, feature and ability.

Most prominent of instances is Egypt. The low, dull race was short, thick-set, coarse-lipped and flat-nosed. The higher race of officers, kings, teachers and priests was tall, more delicate of limb and feature and well proportioned.

A Study of Chinese Traits.

The Mongolian race is being studied lately with particular care by Rachatnikoff, who has come to the conclusion that the yellow stock must be represented in his perfect race. He believes that the Chinese have latent inventive capacities not possessed by the Caucasian or even the Japanese. He bases this opinion on the fruits of long study into the beginnings of Chinese history.

According to his researches, what is now China was covered with dense forests full of the ancestors of the North American Indian. The Chinese from central Asia fought their way East along the river valleys much as the first settlers of America did.

The "Indians" used the same tactics of shooting arrows and hurling tomahawks from behind trees and gave even more trouble to the invading Mongolian than to the white man. The "Indians'" tactics were as highly perfected as they ever were later and so were his weapons.

The Chinese had no guns or anything in the way of equipment much superior to the savage. It took nearly 1,000 years to conquer the land and in that time the Chinese showed wonderful inventive and resistive abilities.

They invented and discovered machines, processes and compounds of which the cannon and gunpowder were probably not the greatest.

M. Rachatnikoff says that all our great inventions are rediscoveries of the Chinese progressive period.

Why the Chinamen did not build railroads, steamships, automobiles, subways and skyscrapers in those days was because his ideas were so far ahead of his time that they were impractical.

The humbler arts and sciences had not progressed to a stage where great mechanical undertakings were possible. All materials were so expensive to prepare and convey, and tools and power were so scarce and crude, that great undertakings either failed to be completed or when done failed to pay.

The Food Question, Too.

So the Celestial slowly, generation after generation, let the idea sink into his mind that great engineering and mechanical achievements were a delusion. Their ancestors had tried them all and found they did not pay. This opinion exists to-day. They view the progress of the white man with mild scorn.

From this it will appear that Rachatnikoff values the Mongolian strain not only for its inventive capacity, but for its philosophy. An admixture of Mongolian blood might be supposed to offset the modern tendency to ragged-edged nerves, which, of course, react both against beauty and physical power.

Ultimately, the experiments will lead to a combination of the beautiful blond heads of the North with the Roman nose, which promises valor and strength of character when they exist with a good jaw and chin. And all the time foods are studied, to determine what kinds nourish the body and brain best, while giving the teeth and jaws enough to do to maintain their proper development.

It will be seen from all this that M. Rachatnikoff attempts to go Darwin "one better." He will attempt to make "special selection" do more than could ever be hoped for "natural selection," even under the most favorable conditions.

THE PRINCESS PATRICIA.

PRINCESS PATRICIA OF ENGLAND MUST MARRY THE BOY KING OF SPAIN THO' SHE LOVES ANOTHER

Prince Eitel, the Man She Loves.

The Newest Portrait of Alfonso XIII.

LONDON, July 3.

IT is now pretty well settled that Princess Patricia, daughter of the Duke of Connaught and niece of King Edward, must marry Alfonso XIII., the boy king of Spain. This has been settled upon "for reasons of state," and the Princess will give herself to the young Spanish monarch to please her uncle, the King of England.

Lucky girl to be a queen? By no means—poor Princess Patricia is heartbroken at her misfortune. She loves another.

Alfonso, the youngest King in Europe, she cannot learn to love. This, long-legged and narrow-shouldered, the young King has nothing in his personality to inspire romantic affection. His thick lip and protruding jaw and the cruel lines of his mouth repel instead of appeal to her. In his uniform he looks like a comic opera soldier, and in his citizen's clothes he appears like one of the palace servants dressed up for a holiday.

Princess Patricia cannot escape these critical impressions as she compares the man she must marry with the man she longs to marry. For the man who has really won her heart is Prince Eitel Frederick, brother of the Crown Prince of Germany—handsome, full of life and wholesome buoyancy. There is no doubt that she believes he loves her, too, in spite of the current accounts of how Prince Eitel and the Princess Ena of Battenberg have been begging their respective parents to let them wed at once. For when the Prince was last in England and when she has visited Germany of late the attentions of the German Emperor's second son have been most tender.

She Wants No Throne With Alfonso.

Princess Patricia is proud as well as romantic, with full consciousness of the superiority of the royal family of England over that of Battenberg. She is well aware of the many flirtations of the German Crown Prince before he was at last safely married, and could not expect his younger brother, at his susceptible age, to refrain altogether from similar youthful ebullitions. At the recent marriage of her elder sister, Princess Margaret, to Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, both she and the Princess Ena served as bridesmaids, and there was enough of cordiality noticed in their attitude toward each other to show that neither one regarded the other in the light of a rival.

So Princess Patricia, romantic, and with no desire in her heart to occupy a throne, loves Prince Eitel as ardently as ever—and now, for the first time, is made hopeless by "reasons of state."

No sooner had King Alfonso set foot on English soil than he laid siege both to Princess Patricia and to her royal uncle. King Edward made no effort to disguise his pleasure. No one in court circles could have any doubt what this meant. Poor Princess Patricia deceived herself as long as possible, but before the young King embarked for his return to Spain she realized what a small matter her personal inclinations were compared with the interest of kingdoms.

It is related that when, finally, she saw all her dreams of happiness dispelled she threw herself upon her couch and would not be comforted.

All the girls in court society of England and Germany agree that Prince Eitel is "a darling." He resembles his mother, the Empress, even more than the Crown Prince takes after the Kaiser. He is of a very affectionate disposition, with a merry countenance and an animated manner that are hard to resist. In many ways he is an ideal match for Princess Patricia, whose proud, romantic and serious, dreamy nature finds in his blithe temperament the most joyous attraction.

Lacking the sort of ambition which makes a throne the summit of human hopes, the Princess dreamed only of a love match and a long and happy life with an adoring husband who had no great affairs of the world to distract him. The chance of Prince Eitel coming to the German throne was sufficiently remote to assure her that he filled this ideal. So her mind echoed her heart's desire—only for the whole delicious structure to be overturned through her misfortune in being a princess of the blood.

It will take her a long while to become wholly reconciled to the inevitable. Her proud English conservatism could find no sympathy with the flamboyant, almost republican, hail-fellow-well-met and reckless behavior of Alfonso in France and England. There was something hard and almost grotesque about it—very different from the happy and gentle boisterousness of Prince Eitel.

Merry-Hearted Prince Eitel Her Ideal.

There seemed to be no golden mean in the conduct of Alfonso. One moment he would exhibit the haughtiness and tyrannical manner of all the ancient Spanish kings, and the next he might be risking his life in an automobile or playing some undignified boyish prank. Especially affronted was Princess Patricia when the story was told to her with glee of how young King Alfonso, upon bidding the Queen of England good-night once during his visit, boasted to her of his prowess as an athlete, and immediately illustrated the point by turning a series of flip-flaps down the corridor to the door of his own apartments. Probably she reflected that if Prince Eitel still indulges in flip-flaps he confines that performance to appropriate occasions.

The reasons why poor Princess Patricia is to be sacrificed to the glory of England are quite simple. This is one detail of the great game in which all European nations are now more or less involved. For a King of Spain to visit England at all was significant of how far-reaching is this game. That visit overthrew all traditions. It throws a veil over the fate of the Spanish armada, and Spain is accustomed to cherish her grievances and her misfortunes as well as her triumphs. But now, since the lowest ebb of her power among nations—after her loss to the United States of her West Indian possessions and the Philippines and the humiliation of her army and naval pride—she is trying to learn from other nations how to regain some part of her former prestige and prosperity.

She has remained on fairly good terms with France, but France, being a republic, cannot offer a queen for her throne. But more and more since the reverses of Russia in the Far East France has been growing cold toward the Empire of the North and cordial to England. Japan, the indomitable; England, mistress of the seas; France, prosperous in all things in spite of the most terrible reverses—these three might hold their own against the world, and the friendship of them all to Spain would give her every opportunity to retrieve the past. No wonder that King Alfonso was willing to visit England and seek a queen there.

As for England, it would be the most foolish policy imaginable for her to neglect to meet Spain half way. Already she is virtually protector of Portugal. While winning the friendship of France why should she leave any part of Southern Europe open to the blandishments of her great enemy, Russia, or the much suspected Kaiser? To help poor old Spain rehabilitate herself would not cost her much, and to have the whole of the European Atlantic coast and all the coasts of the Mediterranean in her own or friendly hands would be decidedly worth while.

More Coasts for England.

Royal matrimonial alliances have usually been stronger than any other kind. The court of Spain has magnificent memories; it may again become as magnificent as any—certainly with England's aid. A daughter of a brother of the English King would hardly be wanted on its throne as it is. The difference of religion in the two countries is no bar, for the Princess Patricia will obediently embrace the Roman Catholic faith as a preliminary to becoming the Queen of Spain—all of which has been settled, after consultation with the Vatican.

These are "the reasons of state" which have blotted out the love romance of Princess Patricia.

"If I am condemned to be a queen," poor Patricia might be justified in saying to her royal uncle, "can you not find me a throne less shabby and battered than that of Spain?"

Even as recently as ten years ago Spain was still able to hold up her head among royal nations. In fact, she was decadent all through, but her traditions of grandeur had received no shock sufficient to destroy their effect upon the mind of the world. Her industries and her finances were in a deplorable condition, but she had a large standing army and a respectable navy, and several prosperous colonies.

Spain Only a Poor Relation.

But the very instant the United States pricked her bubble it collapsed utterly, and the existing ruins are the most pathetic to be found in history. What soldiers she has are not paid, her few remaining ships are rotten and badly manned, her castles and forts are overtaxed—and her vaunted traditions are only material for a second edition of "Don Quixote." Cuba and the Philippines were her main support. Now she has only the stony hillsides of her most ancient domains and industries that are moribund. Her relations with England can hardly ever be more than those of a poor relation who has a few useful qualities to commend her to continued aid and comfort.

Day by day England is bound to avail herself of every advantage in the way of new alliances is becoming more apparent. The war flame is spreading all over Europe. At this writing Russia's schemes of conquest are discouraged by a rebellion which seems to have reached the proportions of a revolution; but that ancient race of warriors in Norway has risen against Sweden, whose Crown Prince is the new husband of King Edward's niece—and England will have at least an indirect share in all that trouble. The [illegible] general becomes the war-conflagration the [illegible] to secure even the poor support of Spain.

The Princess who has been condemned to sit on that shabby throne is one of the most beautiful in the world. She is tall and slender, although not quite so tall and queenly of carriage as her sister Margaret, now wife of Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden. Her chief charm lies in her simple, unaffected manners and her dreamy cast of countenance. She and her sister were great favorites of the late Queen Victoria, as little girls. They have always had the freedom of the different royal palaces, and when the Duke and Duchess of Connaught went to India for four years Queen Victoria took full charge of them.

While Margaret was always fond of outdoor sports, Princess Patricia loved books and music best. Bagshot, the chief country place of the Duke of Connaught, is typical of rural England at its best. The surroundings are romantic, and these influences, with those of her favorite books, fostered the soft sentiments of poor Patricia, who must now exchange everything she cherishes for a throne that is [illegible].

MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT

MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT ENGAGED TO CONGRESSMAN LONGWORTH?

Congressman Nicholas Longworth.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—[illegible]

"I SAY she is" and "I say she isn't" is the never-ending dispute of gossip here over the interesting report of Miss Alice Roosevelt's engagement to Congressman Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio.

Miss Roosevelt knows her own mind and keeps her own counsels, but there are signs on the horizon which the wise and experienced are able to interpret. The most significant recent episode to confirm the rumors was the visit of Miss Roosevelt to Mr. Longworth's home as the guest of his married sister, Mrs. Bruckner Wallingford, of Cincinnati. "Now that he has taken the girl home for the approval of his family," the gossips declare, "the announcement of the engagement is not far off."

But those who think that there is nothing more serious than a flirtation base their opinion on the belief that Miss Roosevelt is an ambitious girl and will be satisfied with nothing less than great wealth and a title. They point out that she has made it a point to visit the "400" in New York and Newport and has accepted all invitations in the multi-millionaire society set. In her conspicuous position, as the young woman of the White House, she has been much flattered and has received an enormous amount of attention. This, they argue, is enough to turn any girl's head and make her feel that she will accept only a prince or a plutocrat.

On the other hand Miss Roosevelt's friends declare that she is a sensible girl and will marry only for love. And, besides, they point out that it is not at all certain that she has had many offers. It is always taken for granted that girls of prominence have no end of proposals, whereas the truth is that they do not. The very fact of their conspicuous position frightens men away; they assume that she would not listen to them. And thus it happens that many of Miss Roosevelt's girl friends have married and yet she herself is still single. So, while her engagement to Mr. Longworth might not be so brilliant a climax to her White House career as many ambitious imaginations would dream, still perhaps no better offer has been made.

And so the gossip runs on, putting this and that together and forming conclusions to be discussed and disputed.

There are a few well-established facts that all admit, though different constructions and reasonings are based upon them.

It is certainly true that Miss Roosevelt permits and even encourages the attentions of Congressman Longworth. She accepts his invitations and his escort. She even shows that she desires the most friendly relations with his family. This is a great deal for a girl in Miss Roosevelt's position—a girl who knows well that she is in the public eye and that everything she does is bound to be commented on and interpreted to mean something.

Miss Roosevelt's attitude says as plainly as words: "Well, all right, to have the pleasure of Mr. Longworth's society I'm willing to stand the fire of gossip."

The natural conclusion of her visit to Cincinnati was that she was sufficiently interested in Mr. Longworth to want to know him in his own town in the old homestead where he was born some thirty-six years ago. Rookwood is the name of it and it was built by the grandfather of the present Congressman, Nicholas Longworth.

Everybody Knows the Longworths.

This is important because it is one of the facts that the gossips who declare Alice Roosevelt is going to marry "Nick" Longworth always announce with gusto. They put it somewhat after this fashion:

"The Longworths?—why everybody knows them! They're the oldest and most distinguished family in all Ohio. They've always had money; heaps of it. Why, this young "Nick" is a great-grandson of the famous grape grower and wine producer, Old Nick. The family millions have come down straight."

The family millions! Yes, it's a fact that the Longworths are rich all the way through. The family millions were divided between the late Judge Nicholas Longworth, the present Nick's father, and his sister Maria, wife of the present Ambassador to Austria, Bellamy Storer.

The millions are all there still in the family, and some day doubtless they will come down to the young Congressman, who is, according to persistent rumor, an aspirant for the hand of Miss Roosevelt. But meanwhile the power to dispose of them is vested in Mother Longworth. She holds the purse strings, and holds them tightly and with wonderful ability. Not until after her death will her children—Clara, who married the Count de Chambrun; Annie, who is the wife of Bruckner Wallingford, and Nicholas, member of the United States House of Representatives—have anything more than the income which she sees fit to allow them.

Therefore when one speaks of Nicholas Longworth it is more as a politician who has made his mark than as a millionaire. One also hears of him, particularly in his native town, where no one ever calls him anything but "Nick," as a man of unusual attractions, and the Cincinnati gossips will add "particularly to women."

One of the peculiarities of this romance of the President's daughter and the Congressional Representative is that in Washington speculation is confined to whether she will or will not, while in the young man's native town they are saying: "How about Nick?" And then they add as though every one must understand "You know Nick."

Had Never Fallen in Love.

After some years and many repetitions of this the gossips have come to the conclusion that Nick isn't a marrying man. He is extremely popular, very talented and very versatile. He is a most experienced and admiral horseman and an extremely good musician, but he doesn't fall in love. He graduated from Harvard in '91, with the degree A. B.; he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School with the degree LL.D.; he is the author of the municipal code providing the form of government of the cities and villages of Ohio passed at a session of the General Assembly; he was nominated and elected to Congress by a flattering plurality of fifteen thousand votes—but he doesn't fall in love.

Is he in love now? That is the burning question in the Congressman's native State, where Alice Roosevelt was so recently his and his sister's guest.

Even those who know him best believe that he is in love at last and has been for many months. Ever since he first began to hang about in the train of Alice Roosevelt and her friend, the picturesque and lively Countess Cassini.

At first they whispered among themselves "Another flirtation." And they believed that the object of it was the skillful Countess. Then gradually it began to dawn upon the most observant that the real object of Congressman Longworth's admiration was the President's daughter. His attentions were for her, whenever she would accept them.

Gradually she accepted more and more of them. Her attitude toward the gossips was plainly: "What do I care what they say, so long as I am happy?"

As to the Congressman. Being asked if he was engaged to Miss Roosevelt, even as far back as last September, he answered, "I am aware of the report, but I have nothing whatever to say."

After that his attentions went on with such zeal that it was very difficult for the Roosevelt family and their friends to brand the growing rumors as absolutely groundless.

Where Miss Roosevelt went there was Mr. Longworth. When she went to the theatre he met her at her carriage and escorted her to her box.

"Who shall we have to meet Miss Roosevelt?" some hostess in Washington would ask.

"Why, Mr. Longworth, of course!" would come the answer.

Even on Secretary Taft's list of guests for the trip to the Orient is the name of Nicholas Longworth immediately following that of Alice Roosevelt.

All Winter long society in Washington has allotted these two young people to each other. And at the end of the Winter Miss Roosevelt gave every evidence of not minding the apportionment the least bit in the world—in fact she emphasized it by going to Cincinnati to be the guest of the Longworths at Rookwood.

Mrs. Longworth was in Europe visiting her daughter, the Countess de Chambrun, but Mrs. Bruckner Wallingford served as chaperon instead. The papers in Cincinnati hinted broadly at the engagement of Miss Roosevelt and the Congressman. But it didn't seem to annoy the young people in the least.

Early on the morning of June 2 Mr. Longworth went [illegible] miles out of town to meet Miss Roosevelt. After that her life became a round of gayety—receptions, dinners, garden parties, races, ball games; and always Congressman Longworth was at her side. Over and over again the papers announced he would eventually win the hand of the President's daughter in marriage. Over and over again the President's daughter must have heard the rumor. She did absolutely nothing to check it. On the contrary, she gave it plenty of food to grow on.

Children Call Her "Bride."

Of course, ever since Miss Roosevelt came of age and made her debut it has been determined that she must marry. If she will not have one suitor, then straightway gossip provides her with another. But this time, if Mr. Longworth is not finally successful, Miss Roosevelt at least will have to reconcile her conscience to the fact that she has given Congressman Longworth more encouragement than any other of her admirers.

Even her departure from Cincinnati was the [illegible] of congratulations. She and Mr. Longworth, with her maid and the luggage in a carriage behind them, arrived at the station fifteen minutes ahead of time.

They sat down on a pile of lumber to wait for the train, neither of them appearing in the least anxious for its arrival. In a few minutes a crowd of children of all colors and sizes collected about them.

One little girl had told all the others that it was the President's daughter and the man she was going to marry. At once she acquired a double interest.

One child had a bunch of daisies in her hand.

"Give 'em to the bride," suggested her neighbor in a stage whisper. The next moment Miss Roosevelt received the flowers with a blush and a smile.

The evidence has been piling up for a year, and the conclusion—well, there are those who say she is—and they are very positive; and there are those who say she isn't—and they are equally positive.

Happiness in a Three Room Flat

By Rose Harriet Pastor.

YOU have asked me to write something for your readers on happiness in a three-room flat.

Many people believe happiness in a three-room flat is something different or something less possible than happiness in a five or six room flat or in a mansion. This is a mistake.

Ecstasy, prayer, love, enthusiasm, heroism, idealism, the opening of the spirit world that shuts out the material world or shows us the unreality of it—do not these things set free the soul and make it happy? And are not those things to be found in the tenement dwellers as among those who live in mansions?

What spiritual joy or beauty can exist for the man who owns beautiful parks, yet is not stirred at the sight of them—who is a slave, perhaps, to some gross passion—who walks in the midst of Summer loveliness with his head bowed and eyes fixed on the ground, thinking of the race track or the gambling den for which he is bound?

He knows as little about happiness, has felt it as rarely, as the wretched gambler who makes his bed in some bare attic.

Or what freedom or happiness has the woman in mansion or tenement who is a slave of fashion—who encases her body, the temple of her soul, in nature-destroying apparel and is forced continually to fix her mind on her own physical discomfort? Does this woman live in a three-room flat or a thirty-room mansion, as the case may be? Does she not rather live in the grip of a thing that dwarfs and enslaves her body and soul? What has the size of one's house to do with spiritual growth, beauty or happiness?

The woman or man who has health of body and of mind and lives in the spirit world, where all is ideally real, can live a really ideal life anywhere.

Even a dingy flat may contain undreamed-of beauties for those whose thoughts are beautiful and to whom thought life is a strong reality. The homely, commonplace and materially wretched surroundings of any man become inspirations to him, touched with his own spiritual joy. They furnish him with ideas and ideals that lift him to a higher spiritual plane, and set him free from themselves as it were. He is not dependent on surrounding circumstances—they serve him. They delight with their spiritual beauty—ugliness penetrated by happiness.

On the other hand, materially beautiful things have no lasting charm for those who look upon them with the eye of the flesh.

Just a clumsy block of wood used for a chair in some wretched tenement will fill one man with thoughts of the tree from which the block was hewn and the seed from which the tree sprang; a wonderful sense of the infinite in which all things have their beginnings will come over his spirit and fill his soul with an unspeakable joy and peace. The clumsy block of wood will have brought him close to God and given him a deep sense of happiness; and some other man might be stirred by the sight of wonderfully carved chairs to more than a momentary sense of curiosity.

"To the material philosopher," says Amiel, "the beautiful is a mere accident, and therefore rare. To the spiritual philosopher the beautiful is the rule, the law, the universal foundation of things, to which every form returns as soon as the force of accident is withdrawn."

Happiness in a three-room flat! Happiness anywhere in the possession of God, and in sacrifice, in the endeavor to make others happy. (Never mind making them good. "One man I must make good, myself.") Again I wish to quote Amiel:

> "From the point of view of happiness the problem of life is insoluble, for it is our highest aspirations which prevent us from being happy. From the point of view of duty there is the same difficulty, for the fulfilment of duty brings peace, not happiness. It is divine love, the love of the holiest, the possession of God by faith, which solves the difficulty; for if sacrifice has itself become a joy—a lasting, growing and imperishable joy—the soul is then secure of an all-sufficient and unfailing nourishment."

And happiest, they, and most secure their souls of an all-sufficient and unfailing nourishment, who meet in life the companion and partner God meant for them, to share each other's love in thus loving and serving God and humanity.

HOW TO CARE FOR THE FEET IN HOT WEATHER.

BY DR. LEWIS H. MORISS.

EARLY Summer is called "the trying season for feet." This is because of a curious reason that has its parallel in nature. It is in the Spring that sap, which is the blood of trees, begins to flow freely after the half-sleeping state of the previous Winter. It is the time of a general awakening in nature, and the human body partakes of the revivification. The cold of the Winter has contracted the feet. In the early Summer the new warmth causes them to expand, which is the reason that chiropodists are hearing the universal complaint, "My feet are so dreadfully swollen. What shall I do?"

The part of wisdom is to wear the largest pair of shoes you have, or if you have none in which your feet are comfortable under the new conditions, buy a pair that are large enough.

If, having shod yourself properly, you still suffer from swollen and aching feet, try the old remedy that was in vogue at the time of the famous six-day walking matches. My father treated some of the champions of that time, and when they came to him with blistered, swollen and aching feet, he bathed the affected members with a simple solution that gave instant relief.

Take two quarts of cider vinegar,
Five cents worth of Fuller's earth.
A pinch of alum.

Boil the vinegar until it has "boiled down" to half its original quantity. Pour the Fuller's earth and alum into it, shake it well and set it in some convenient place where you can frequently give it the vigorous shaking it requires. The boiling requires an entire day, and the solution is not ready for use until it has stood for two more days and been frequently shaken. The vinegar and Fuller's earth reduce the inflammation and soothe the feet and the alum hardens and shrinks them slightly.

The formula of the Red Cross antiseptic foot powder is the same or similar to one which my father used for these same contestants in six-day walking matches:

Zinci sterate.
Acidi salycilic.
Acidi boracic.
Eucalyptyne (listerine).
Pulverised talcum.

Besides the general complaint of swollen and throbbing feet at this season is that of dry feet and cracked skin. Massage with a good salve made of mutton tallow and cooling ingredients should correct that trouble in a night.

Many mothers are coming to me at this season and saying: "Doctor, we are going to the country, or we will be travelling for three months and not be able to see a chiropodist. How shall I take care of my children's feet and my own?"

My answer is invariably: "Wear loose shoes, and good cotton stockings. Lisle thread hose are harsh and irritate the feet. Bathe the feet every night before retiring, in warm water with a little borax in it. In the morning bathe them again in tepid water, this time dashing cold water on them afterward. It is not at all probable that feet will develop corns if cared for in this way, but should anything so unprecedented happen place the foot in a shallow basin filled with water in which you have sprinkled plenty of washing soda. There is no danger of getting too much. Invariably the corn will become so soft that you can push it off with your finger.

It is only the person of slight frame who can safely wear low shoes or ties. Stout women with delicate ankles should never wear other than high shoes, for they need the support of the uppers. Do not wear any lighter soled shoes in the warm than in the cold season. Wear heavy soles with light uppers

SMALL TROUBLE SAVERS.

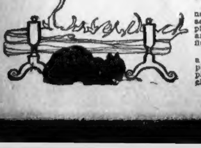
JUST knowing when and how to do a few little tricks about the household is of no end of value in saving time, worry and expense. To clean the porcelain kettle, fill it half full with hot water and put in a tablespoonful of powdered borax; let it boil. If this does not remove all the stains, scour with a cloth rubbed with soap and borax.

To purify the air of the cellar and destroy parasitical growth, place some roll brimstone in a pan, set fire to it, close the doors and windows as tightly as possible for two or three hours; repeat every three months.



Add to the covered brick used as a door stop a strip of the covering sewed strongly to the sides, and raised just enough to admit the foot, then lift it by the toes and save stooping.

Apply a drop of oil to the door hinges to keep them from creaking.

A cork soaked in oil makes a good substitute for a glass stopper.

Kitchen tables may be made "white as snow" if washed with soap and wood ashes. Floors look best scrubbed with cold water, soap and wood ashes.

The mica windows of coal stoves can easily be cleaned with a soft cloth dipped in vinegar and water. This should be done when putting the stove up.

In sickness, when disinfectants are needed in sinks and basins, use carbolic acid, allowing four tablespoonfuls to each pint of cold water; pour down the pipes, and let it remain half an hour before flushing.

Half an ounce of gum arabic dissolved in a wineglassful of boiling water, and adding plaster-of-Paris to form a thick paste. Apply with a brush to the edges of broken china, and join ends evenly together.

THE SUMMER GIRL'S COMPLEXION BY DR. CAISSARATO

"The face should be gently massaged after the bath."

"Salt water is exceedingly bad for the skin that covers the muscles, and for the hair, which should be protected by a close-fitting rubber-cloth turban."

"If wet, the hair may be dried on a light framework."

ARE salt water baths good for beauty? That seems to be the great question that echoes up and down every seaside resort.

Inasmuch as anything that is healthful is also beautifying, salt water is to be recommended. But its use must not be abused. There are many people who cannot stand salt water baths at all. A plunge into the ocean chills them. They are fatigued afterwards and not invigorated.

Consult your physician before you go to the seashore. If he knows your constitution and recommends sea baths then you may be sure that, as they are good for your health, they will also be good for your beauty. But don't take them in the mistaken idea that because they benefit some other person they will benefit you.

Salt water, as a rule, is excellent for the muscles. It puts new blood into them, infuses them with phosphorous and iodine, rejuvenates them, dissipates the superfluous flesh that crowds and thickens them, gives them elasticity and suppleness.

But—yes, there is a but in spite of all these recommendations—salt water is exceedingly bad for the skin that covers the muscles, and for the hair, which should be protected by a close-fitting rubber cloth turban. If wet, the hair may be dried on a light framework fixed to the back of the head and spreading upward.

After several salt baths the skin, according to the susceptibility of the individual, becomes rough, red, thick, scaly and even eruptive.

Follow With a Fresh Water Bath.

A second bath should be taken not more than four hours after the salt bath. And to make it completely a beauty bath the face should be gently massaged after the bath with some witch hazel cream, as that liquid possesses marked soothing qualities.

| | |
|---|---|
| White petrolatum | 9 oz. |
| White wax | 1¼ oz. |
| Spermaceti | 1¼ oz. |
| Distilled extract of witch hazel | 3 oz. |
| Oil of rose geranium | 10 drops |

After the massage the skin should be gently wiped off with a fine cloth and then powdered with pure starch.

Those who do not like being massaged and who object to what they call sticky cream baths, may bathe their skin with equally good results after the fresh water starch bath with the following lotion:

| | |
|---|---|
| White Castile soap | ½ oz. |
| Honey | 120 gr. |
| Borax | 120 gr. |
| Distilled extract of witch hazel | 2 oz. |
| Glycerine | 2 oz. |
| Alcohol | 2 oz. |
| Water, enough to make | 16 oz. |

Now, shall I be beautiful? You ask. Well, your muscles will be invigorated and your flesh will be smooth, but—yes, again, but there are certain skins that all the care in the world will not save from sunburn the moment the sea air strikes them.

A gentle light sunburn is not very much to be dreaded, but unfortunately it cannot always be kept in check. It frequently becomes extremely painful, developing a tendency to acne, pimples, eczema and all kinds of spots more or less deep-seated. Skin troubles that follow violent sunburn are apt to be very tenacious and difficult to cure. As prevention is always better than cure I should advise all those with tender skins to protect them as much as possible.

Don't expose the face or hands to the sun's rays any more than you can help. Wear big hat, veils, gloves. A splendid mask against the sun's rays and not an unbecoming one may be made with a good layer of cream. Spread it over the face thickly and allow all of it that will to sink into the skin. Then take off just enough not to appear too greasy. Then powder thickly.

To Protect from Sunburn.

The best cream to use for this purpose is one containing menthol. This one, for instance, I can recommend highly:

| | |
|---|---|
| Tragacanth, powder | 80 gr. |
| Glycerine | 4 dr. |
| Menthol | 60 gr. |
| Alcohol | 5 dr. |
| Water, enough to make soft | 16 oz. |

When the sun is very hot it is a bad thing to go out in it with rouge or blackening on the face, for these cosmetics are apt to sink into the pores, wide opened by perspiration. You can easily see that this would be bad for the skin.

On coming into the house the face, having been protected with cream and powder, should be washed off with tepid water and a pinch of bi-carbonate of soda—a small teaspoonful of soda to a large glass of water. Then moisten the face with the following lotion, which should be allowed to dry on the skin:

|---|---|
| Tincture of arnica | 4 oz. |
| Glycerine | 6 oz. |
| Rose water | 4 oz. |

Now, if unfortunately in spite of all these precautions the face has become red, congested, sensitive to the touch, swollen and even beginning to peel, the first thing to do is to soothe it with compresses of sterilized gauze dipped in a solution of equal parts of witch hazel and hydrate of chloral. Keep these on constantly, moistening them as often as possible. They will not, perhaps, keep the skin from peeling, but they will lessen the pain of the burning considerably.

Put Oil on the Burned Skin.

As soon as the violent inflammation is somewhat appeased use an emollient cream made up with camphor. I recommend this one:

| | |
|---|---|
| Spermaceti | 2 oz. |
| White wax | 4 oz. |
| Sweet almond oil | 6 oz. |
| Camphor | 2 oz. |
| Oil of bitter almond | 1 dr. |
| Expressed oil of mace | 60 gr. |

Not until after all inflammation and all violent redness have disappeared should one attempt to cure any spots left in the trail of the sunburn. In fact, I should advise doing nothing until the last week of one's stay in the country. Then the cure should be the same as that for tan, of which I will speak at length later.

| | |
|---|---|
| Glacial phosphoric acid | 80 gr. |
| Glycerine | 4 dr. |
| Water, enough to mak | 6 oz. |

| | |
|---|---|
| Borax | 320 gr. |
| Zinc oxide | 320 gr. |
| Glycerine | 2½ oz. |
| Bay rum | 2½ oz. |
| Distilled water | 10 oz. |

Mix and apply freely five or six times a day.

| | |
|---|---|
| Zinc sulphocarbolate | 15 gr. |
| Glycerine | 4 dr. |
| Rose water | 2½ oz. |
| Alcohol | 3 dr. |
| Cologne water | 15 drops |
| Spirits of camphor | 15 drops |

Wash the face morning and evening with soap, dry well, apply the solution and allow it to dry upon the skin.

Vacation Etiquette for Girls

by Linda Hull Larned

EVERYTHING has been said of the Summer girl except to criticise her manners. She has been admired, abused, ridiculed and guyed, but no one has tried to help her, and she sadly needs help, those will admit who have seen her at Summer hotels and boarding houses.

The Summer girl is a product of the independence of women. It is not always the working girl—the wage or salary earner—who offends against good taste. It is often the one who spends her Winters in obscure places getting ready for Summer conquests, or perhaps the one who is a devotee of society all the year. She becomes so eager to have a good time, to get all the fun going and a man or two thrown in for spice, that she flings conventionalities to the winds.

A working girl may be obliged to go on her vacation unchaperoned or stay at home. So we do occasionally see the independent young woman at Summer hotels. But aloneness is only condoned by her aloofness. The girl who is obliged, by force of circumstances, to go about alone, a prey to unkind criticism, should have a care that every word and act be above reproach. The more inconspicuous she can make herself the better for her, for she must remember that the modest, reserved, self-respecting woman now always meets with consideration and admiration.

There are things, however, that the most carefully guarded young woman is prone to do which makes the position of the unchaperoned one most painful. For instance, she dresses conspicuously in the morning and wears high heels, or she exposes too large a surface of neck and arms in the evening at the public table or in the offices on the verandas.

One can be merry without being boisterous, jolly without playing rough house, and the loud laugh or shrill shout is always unbecoming to a woman. When she is athletic she need not be masculine.

There are also some who are addicted to bad manners at table. It is bad form to say that one loves an article of food or drink. Food and drink are liked, not loved. We like a thing because it gives us pleasure, or we enjoy it, but we love only other human beings and living animals. We may love a pet lamb, but only while he is alive and responsive. When he is in a crown roast we relish him. We only love those who inspire us with a tender or passionate or compassionate affection.

A well-bred young woman does not use toothpicks; neither does she tuck her napkin in her neck to protect her fluffy front. In fact, neither men nor women tuck them in or pin them on anywhere. Even the portly gentleman learns to eat without spilling a drop or morsel upon his immaculate front. The napkin should never be seen above the belt except when taken in the hand to wipe the mouth.

And then the vulgar habit of gulping food. There is a reason why other than to make dentists flourish. Food must be chewed in order to keep the teeth and to digest it. Neither should every mouthful be washed down. If there is any moistening required other than the mouth can furnish it should be done by the cook in the kitchen. Neither do well-bred people "scrape the platter clean," although it is not good manners to leave a mussy looking plate.

There are a few other things that the well-bred girl will never do. She will not read at table when others are present. She will not drink the contents of her cup or glass at one draught, nor speak with anything in her mouth, smack the lips, or make any noise with the mouth, except the legitimate one of laughing or talking. Neither will she pick bones of any kind. This is as much of a crime as it is to pick a quarrel. She will not eat the sherbet, or punch, as it is sometimes called, with her meat course. It is intended to be a life-saving station between courses.

Young women cannot be too careful from whom they receive attention, and above all they should not take the initiative toward acquaintance with even the best of men.

"Trying to get acquainted" is the most common and vulgar method of securing friends, and the well-bred girl, be she rich or poor, will never, never make "goo goo" eyes at anybody.

DELICIOUS AND APPROPRIATE DESSERTS OF THE SEASON.

BY MARGARET HALL.

A LACK of forethought in planning the menu often constitutes a detriment to the due appreciation of many excellent dishes. Intelligence and consistency should be exercised in regard to suitable combinations.

When the chief feature of the bill of fare, the roast or boiled piece de resistance, and accompaniments, are of substantial or not easily digested character, the soup and the desserts should be of opposite nature or quality in reasonable contrast.

At a season, for instance, when veal, corned beef, boeuf a la mode, pork may be presented and enjoyed, to offer in advance of such meats a thick, rich soup, and to top off with a heavy suet, plum or boiled batter pudding, a mince pie, apple dumpling, etc., is to perpetrate an injustice all around. The suggestions and formulas given below will be found suitable and helpful in supplementing an over-substantial menu:

Macedoine of fruits, fruit jelly with whipped cream, fruit souffiees, lemon sponge, a delicate lemon pudding, apple charlotte, baked apples with rice and cream, apple dowdy baked with very light batter, bananas en surprise, coffee cream in meringue shells, junkel with grated pineapple, orange pudding, orange float, wine jelly in small forms with whipped cream, farina cream pudding, Bavarian cream of various flavors, pain perdu with brandy and lemon sauce, snow pudding, cider jelly, caramel pudding, Roman cream, etc.

LEMON PUDDING—One large cup of sugar, butter the size of an egg, three eggs, one and a half cups of milk, three level tablespoonfuls of flour, the juice and rind of one lemon. Rub the butter and sugar to a cream, beat in the egg yolks, one at a time, add the grated lemon rind and juice, stirring continuously, blending all gradually. Sift in the flour very slowly and add the milk by degrees, stirring well all the while. Fold in the stiffly whipped whites of the eggs, to which has been added a pinch of salt, and bake in a moderate oven until a rich brown, which will be in from twenty-five to thirty minutes.

BANANAS EN SURPRISE.—A very inviting desert made from good home-made banana ice cream. When firmly frozen remove in spoonfuls, mold into forms of small bananas, covering with banana skins to keep in good shape; place these back carefully in the can in the ice cream freezer for a couple of hours before dinner; when ready to serve remove from the banana skins and place on dainty doilies of lace paper.

PAIN PERDU—Cut stale bread into small squares, about two inches; dip in beaten egg and milk (one egg to a cupful of milk); fry quickly to a golden brown in hot butter and serve while crisp and hot wit hthe following sauce: Cut a lemon into small bits, rind and all except the [illegible]; put into a serving bowl with a cupful of loaf sugar. Pour over all a cupful of boiling hot water, and as the sugar dissolves add a wineglassfull of brandy.

ORANGE PUDDING—Peel carefully, removing all the pulp, six large seedless oranges; cut into thin slices and lay in a baking dish; cover with a rich boiled custard; let stand on the ice for several hours; an hour before dinner cover with a stiff meringue; bake until a light brown; place at once on the ice again and until ready to serve.

APPLE DOWDY—Cream together one-quarter of a cup of butter and a cupful of sugar; add two well beaten eggs, a cupful of milk, stirring all well together, then a cupful of finely sifted flour; beat all together vigorously and add a teaspoonful of baking powder; pour into a baking dish half filled with strained apple sauce of firm, solid consistency and bake in a moderate oven until firm and brown about half an hour.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

NOW is the time when strawberries are coming in great abundance, and the homemaker can satisfy her family with many delicious dishes, both healthful and economical, besides remembering that Winter days will come again and fresh fruit will be only a memory.

It is but little trouble to make jelly—and preserves—and the pleasure is ten-fold in knowing that pure, good food is ready when wanted.

Many people argue that it does not pay in these days when canned goods and jellies can be bought at such a small cost. But when one realizes how much adulteration there is in these very jellies and preserves is it well to risk the health of the family for the sake of a little trouble?

Directions for jellies, canning fruits, making pickles, etc., will be given from time to time, hoping that the "homemaker" will have success in laying by her Winter's store.

Always procure the best fruit for preserving. Fruit that is over ripe will be liable to ferment and cause loss and disappointment.

See that all jars and glasses are well washed and boiled before the fruit is sealed in them. When ready to put away, put them in a dry, clean closet, and with these precautions there need be no fear that the fruit will ferment.

Wash, pick over and let drain nice, firm strawberries. Measure and allow one cup sugar to every cup of fruit.

Put a layer of berries in the bottom of kettle, then a layer of sugar, continued until the berries are all in. Place on slow fire and cook until thick. Do not stir often, only to be sure they are no tsticking to the kettle. When thick put into glasses and seal up the same as jelly.

THE sleeve is quite as important a part of the dress of this Summer as it has been for some months past, and it occupies quite as absorbing a position in the feminine mind as it did some 2,500 years ago, when the prophet Isaiah inveighed against the large puff sleeves worn in his day. The "eternal feminine" does not seem to have changed much since then, and the same might be said of sleeves.

In these a radical change has taken place since last season. Whereas then the sleeves were large, puffy, draped and generally strikingly conspicuous, they are now only conspicuous by reason of their beauty and originality, since a large sleeve is no longer in style, and moderate puffs and small sleeves are in vogue.

The small sleeve, almost fitting to the arm, is quite the latest note in fashion, and it is safe to say that the smaller these are the smarter they are.

People do not seem to grasp this fact readily; perhaps because the large sleeve has left such an indelible impression; for women constantly say to me: "Big sleeves are all the style, aren't they?" and I have to quickly enlighten them.

The small sleeve is the logical sequence of the fitted, small bodice. It would never do for a woman's gown to convey the impression that it was all sleeve and skirt, with a scrap of material in a stripe down the front and back by way of a bodice; yet that is just what a gown would look like if one wore a last year's sleeve with a this Summer's bodice.

The only house in Paris which makes a full sleeve to-day is Callot, and Callot does not take the initiative in styles, as does Paquin, Worth and one or two others.

Indeed, sleeves in Paris have never been as ugly as now. I do not pretend to use them, but make my own sleeves. Lady Duff Gordon said quite the right thing when she asserted that English and American women must now originate and wear their own styles, for Paris seems to have fallen into an unhappy day of inartistic fashions. Even Paquin is not exempt from this sweeping assertion, for he is trying to make women wear a three-quarter coat sleeve, which is neither practical, becoming, nor artistic. It completely spoils the line of the arm and is too short for a short glove and too long for a long one.

Sleeves, to be smart, must have originality about them in cut and trimming. They must be elaborate—as a rule—for the gowns and coats of to-day require elaborate sleeves. The dress sleeve is very dressy, indeed, and is about the most elaborate feature of the gown, although, to be correct, it is comparatively small.

Short sleeves are finished with two or three lace frills and sometimes small puffs with the frills. Pretty much any material is so completed.

Sleeves Should Be Elaborate.

One of the features of the Summer is the dainty little white sleeve which is worn with dresses of other coloring and material. Such sleeves are arranged pretty much on the order of a child's guimpe and have a chemisette or yoke to match. If one pleases, the sleeves and guimpe may form part of a corset cover and so be one garment as well as making it easy to achieve a good fit to the chemisette and sleeves. Sometimes tapes are arranged upon the sleeves and yokes to make them set properly. They require something of this sort to hold them in place, unless they are tacked in position with a needle and thread. Where one has a maid this is the usual method of arranging chemisettes.

The soft white sleeves are made of embroidered mulls or lace, or some material of the same class. They are very pretty and lend an air of Summery daintiness to a gown which is very fetching.

Net is also used in this manner. A net sleeve is cheap and pretty, as well as being smart and practical. Net washes well, and sleeves of it are easily made and always look fresh and sweet.

These and the undersleeves of lace or embroidery are extremely smart and have quite as much vogue as the short sleeve worn without undersleeves.

Another style of trimming the sleeve is to be seen in the short sleeves of bolero jackets, which have lace or embroidery turned up on them.

Brevity and Puffiness Are Correct.

A great many varieties of sleeves are to be found this season, but all maintain the general outline of brevity and puffiness of a limited character.

In Figure A we have the puffed form of sleeve. It is pleated to the armhole and gathered to a band above the elbow. Above this the puff is elaborated with a design of stuffed embroidery and a graceful latticework. A ruffle set on below this band hangs over three graduated ones of white lace which fall in a point over the elbow and narrow over the front of the arm.

Figure B forms quite a contrast to this style—which, by the way, is a good one for many forms of materials. The sleeve in Figure B is intended for a morning coat of black and white check. A fold on the coat laps over the top of the armhole, to which the sleeve is pleated. It is finished with a bias cuff of the material at the elbow, below which fall two flounces of lace.

Of course there is no ironclad rule about the making of a cuff and trimming of a sleeve, but this one will suggest simplicity both in cut and trimming, and simple trimming of another sort may be applied with equal effectiveness.

It is a puff finished with two small puffings above the elbow, and these have a frill upon their upper and lower edges with two frills of lace between. Two lace ruffles complete the elaboration at the elbow.

As will be seen, lace forms an important adjunct to almost every class of sleeve. One might almost say that lace was worn in every sort of sleeve except those of a raincoat, and who knows to what the fad will lead us, and when we may expect to see rubber lace ruffles in our mackintosh sleeves?

A quaint handkerchief effect in the bodice of figure D is arranged so that its points fall upon each side of the armhole, with a border extending over the armhole seam upon the top of the sleeve puff. The sleeve is built with three puffs upon the upper arm and one just at the elbow. Each puff droops over the top of the one below it, and the style is one well adapted to soft, thin materials, such as mulle, crepe de chine and chiffon, batiste and chiffon cloth.

The last puff is trimmed with an inserting of lace and has a flounce of lace below it, falling over the elbow puff. A double ruffle of rather narrow lace completes the sleeve finish below the elbow.

Heavy Laces Rarely Seen.

Heavy, stiff laces are rarely seen upon sleeves and never in sleeve flounces. The sort of lace used for sleeves is always transparent and takes the form of point applique, Honiton, Lierre Valenciennes, Oriental and similar filmy laces that will fall softly and give a misty, frothy effect to a sleeve.

Figure E illustrates a new fashion for making sleeves of contrasting materials. This sleeve is worn with a pompadour gown and is built of pompadour and of plain material, arranged to contrast in the prettiest manner possible.

A good deal of judgment must be exercised in making a sleeve of such contrasts, because unless the blending is skilfully done the line of the arm and grace of the sleeve are apt to suffer.

This sleeve is gathered on above the armhole, and is built with two puffings of contrasting materials, in graduated sizes below the top. Each puff is gathered to a narrow band, which is finished in the back with a bow. Two ruffles of lace finish the elbow, although the number of ruffles is merely determined by the width of the lace and one or three could be used—even more.

In figure F we have an example of how a sleeve of the new and smart striped silk is made up. It has a rather full, square sleeve cap on the shoulder, bordered with embroidered silk and a band of plain color, such as will look best on the silk and will match the color of one of the stripes in the material. The matching a stripe is not absolutely necessary, but it is chic where it can be effectively done.

The plain band is edged with lace. Medallion ornaments of embroidered silk are arranged at the corners of the sleeve cap. The sleeve is built in two puffs, the larger one of which has a curved, ruffled front piece falling below the corner of the sleeve cap and extending across the front of the sleeve. It is made without the color band, but has a border of embroidery and edging of lace. This same trimming finishes the sleeve flounce at the elbow, above two full ruffles of lace.

Bias Folds Are in Vogue.

This is rather a fancy sleeve and is more appropriate to silk than to any very soft or thin material. As bias folds are in vogue now one can be put on as a border in place of the plain band or of the embroidery, according to how dressy one wants the sleeve to appear.

Figure G is another illustration of the popular puffed sleeve. It will be noticed, however, that practically without exception all the puffs are comparatively small.

This sleeve has a shaped cuff extending upon the puff, trimmed with lace and hanging over a small elbow puff of silk. Shoulder pieces are made like the cuff, and extend beyond the top of the sleeve puff. This fad for trimming the tops of armholes and shoulders is distinctly a French one, and looks well on certain sorts of sleeves.

In figure H the shoulder trimming is part of the collar of lingerie and lace which extends over the top of the sleeve puff. A flounce of lace below the larger puff extends over a smaller one, and a double flounce of lace finishes the elbow. This is a very youthful style of sleeve, although by no means confined to gowns for young women.

A long coat sleeve is shown in Figure K—for many people prefer long coat sleeves and insist upon having them. This sleeve is in a striped wool, light in weight and quite smart. Two rows of shirring are put in the top of the sleeve, while its fulness is caught in the back of the cuff effect by a little pointed strap, which is piped with black and has two small black buttons upon it.

The bottom of the sleeve is cut in battlements and these are bordered with four rows of soutache braid and one of satin stitched through the middle. Braid may be used instead of satin, if one pleases. The battlements hang over a puff of lace and mull embroidery, and little frills of lace add to the fluffy appearance of this small inserted cuff. The sleeve is finished with a small cuff of the material covered with rows of soutache and stitched satin bands and edged with a frill of lace.

While I give an illustration of the long coat sleeve I do not recommend it to any woman, because it is not smart, and it is just as easy to make a sleeve in the reigning fashion as not.

Figure L shows a very pretty sleeve made of white chiffon. It is gathered full along the inside seam and under each side of a lace band, finished with frilled pipings of lace that run down the outside of the arm. A cuff of the chiffon is made into puffed panels by means of gathered tucks in upright positions, and a bit of white velvet baby ribbon is used effectively in the trimming.

Some Useful and Interesting Hints to the Home Dressmaker.

THE home dressmaker will find that a few little tricks of the trade are a marvellous aid in making up and altering clothes. There is always a right way and a wrong way of doing even the simplest bit of dressmaking. Here are a few right ways.

Make the under part of a sleeve double, so that it can be darned, as this part wears out sooner than the upper.

Don't forget to do plenty of tacking and pressing. To neglect these two points stamps a garment "home-made" at once.

Always shrink a new braid before sewing to a skirt; otherwise the bottom of the skirt will become puckered the first time of wearing in a shower of rain.

In shortening a skirt pattern, always fold a pleat across the middle of the pattern; never shorten from the top or bottom of the skirt, or the shape will be spoiled.

Home dressmakers who have difficulty in pressing curved seams will find a rolling-pin a very good pressing board, if a clean cloth be wrapped around it.

When putting steel or whalebone into a bodice, bend them slightly at the waist before putting into casing. You will find the bodice fit to the figure much better.

When using a sewing machine, the best way to finish off neatly and firmly is to turn the work round, and work back again a short way, so that the stitches will be double.

When new evening gowns are few and far between, nothing is so useful as either black or white, which by change of flowers or trimming may be altered out of all knowledge.

When putting on a collar, make neck of bodice or blouse slightly smaller than base of collar band, and notch bodice here and there while putting collar on. By so doing you avoid wrinkles.

When cutting out sleeves, to avoid the disaster of cutting both for the same arm, fold the material either face to face or back to back. Place pattern on it and cut both together. A proper pair is bound to be the result.

If you wish to make a walking skirt just to clear the ground without looking too short, adopt the following plan: Measure the person from the waist to the ground, then deduct [illegible] and a half inches.

DRESSING UP AN OLD PROVERB IN A SMART FASHIONABLE GOWN.

'Waste Not, Want Not,' Told in 3 Acts in Modern High Society.

"Come, open your mouth!"

NURSE: Try all I can, mum, I can't get her to eat it.

MRS. VAN BEECKMAN (in a moral voice): Why are you such a wicked little girl as not to eat your rice pudding, Julia?

JULIA (briefly): I'se 'tuffed.

MRS. VAN B. (shocked): Hush, Julia, you mustn't use such words. Stuffed isn't at all a nice word for a little girl. Besides, it's all nonsense. You can eat it if you try. Think of all the hungry children who would be only too glad to have a plate of such delicious rice! Now—try a spoonful.

JULIA (with certainty): 'T'll make me sick.

NURSE: She's that obstinate.

MRS. VAN B.: Nonsense. You're to eat it at once, Julia. Waste not, want not. Come (she takes up the spoon), open your mouth!

NURSE: (anxious): Swaller it, Julia! (Julia, however, sits with her cheeks puffed out by the rice, and a tear in either eye.)

MRS. VAN B. (dropping the second spoonful of rice): Perhaps you'd better take her down, nurse. Quick! (As Julia is being lifted down, her prognostication is suddenly fulfilled. Julia is at once sorry for herself and triumphant.)

MRS. VAN B.: It really is a very pretty dress.

JULIA (not displeased with her appearance): It ought to be, considering the price. What a waste of money it seems!

MRS. VAN B.: My dear Julia, how can you say so? Only three hundred dollars, wasn't it?

JULIA: Lots of people live for more than a year on that.

MRS. VAN B. (declining an argument): I don't see that that has anything to do with it. You can't afford to dress cheaply.

JULIA: Why not?

MRS. VAN B.: As if you didn't know! Mr. Gardner is very particular, and he's certain to be there to-night. (Solicitously) You've only to give him the tiniest bit of encouragement and——

JULIA (to her maid): My slippers, please, Parker.

MRS. VAN B.: You can make the match of the season. Don't waste the opportunity, darling.

JULIA (laughing): Waste not, want not; as you used to say, mother, when I couldn't eat my rice pudding. Do you remember? What a funny proverb it seems!

"You can make the match of the season. Don't miss the opportunity, darling."

MRS. VAN B.: Funny?

MR. GARDNER: I'm going to put a question to you, Miss Van Beeckman. Pop it, I might say.

JULIA: Ladies first; I've got one to pop to you.

MR. GARDNER: Eh, what? Question! All right. Fire away!

JULIA: Don't you think three hundred dollars is a good deal to pay for a dress?

MR. GARDNER (scandalised): I say, you're a Socialist. That all you gave for yours?

JULIA: Well—I did—or I shall—or somebody will for me. Not that it matters. Only you haven't answered my question.

MR. GARDNER: I call it dirt cheap. Should have called it dirt cheap at five hundred, even if I'd had to pay for it myself.

JULIA (musing): I suppose it can't be dear, then, though I should have thought it depended on whether one got three hundred dollars worth of enjoyment or something of that kind out of it. Anyhow, you don't think it a waste of money; so I'll ask you a second question.

MR. GARDNER: O, I say! Come now, it's my turn! Eh, what?

JULIA: Do you think it's waste not to eat rice pudding, if you don't want it?

MR. GARDNER: Rice pudding? What do you mean?

JULIA: I've been thinking. You mustn't be alarmed. I don't often do it. But I've been thinking all the evening how I used to hate rice pudding when I was a child. I used to have to eat it, because it was waste not to do so. My mother used to say that lots of little girls would be only too thankful for it. I wasn't a bit thankful, because it used to—to make me feel ill. And that was because I didn't want it.

JULIA: I'll tell you. I believe I ought to. I mean that there are lots of little girls who would like three hundred dollar frocks and—let's say the husband who would provide them. Now, I shouldn't. Not a bit. So that it really would be waste for me to have him and for one of them to want him.

MR. GARDNER: Meaning?

"I'm going to put a question to you, Miss Van Beeckman."

JULIA (rising as the music of another dance begins): That you'd better not put your question, please. Waste not, want not, you know.

THE KITCHEN OF A BRIDE AND ITS EQUIPMENT---

By Mrs. Linda Hull Larned, Author of "The Hostess of To-day."

IT IS a presumptuous business to undertake to tell a young bride what she should have in her kitchen. It presupposes a speaking acquaintance with her tastes, as well as his (the bridegroom's) idiosyncracies, and their financial condition, and every one knows that each house is a law unto itself so far as its workshop is concerned. The kitchen being the workshop of the house, and not its showroom, its equipment must be utilitarian, the tools selected must be those that will produce the things that they both like, for when there is much entertaining caterers come well equipped with their own tools. For instance, there is no need for a bean pot or a pie plate if baked beans and pies are not to play a part in the daily provender.

And, too, if they are able to have a palatial house, they will have a model kitchen, undoubtedly, with tile walls and cement floors, and porcelain and electric apparatus for all purposes. Such a kitchen costs a mint of money, but by using a little ingenuity one can have a model kitchen which will answer all sanitary purposes without its costing a mint of money. Therefore, we will help our young housekeeper who is possessed of a modest amount of money to start right with a modest amount of equipment.

Kitchen Must Have a Good Floor.

The first thing that is needed in an up-to-date kitchen is a good floor. Hard wood floors have been recommended from time to time and so have floors made of cement or tiling. After using one for many years and carefully investigating the other, I am convinced that the floor par excellence for all practical purposes is the one covered with a good quality of linoleum of tile pattern and soft coloring. It is far easier to keep clean than any other and much softer to tread upon, and these are two most important considerations. There is a great deal of respect shown these days for the one who does the work—respect for her time and comfort—and the kitchen of an up-to-date establishment, no matter whether it be a mansion or a flat, must be as ready for inspection as the parlor, living room or bedroom.

Everything Should Be Washable.

With a floor covering of linoleum we should have a washable wall and ceiling, and washable wood work. When the wall cannot be of tile or glazed brick, then paint or paper must be made as sanitary. The painted wall being of rough surface, more or less, is more difficult to keep clean than the wall covered with the varnished paper which comes in tile pattern. But to secure the washability of this washable paper, an extra coat of thin varnish should be put on after the paper is hung and thoroughly dry. It will then bear a bath of soap and water frequently and will last longer.

"Every shelf in the kitchen should be free and open to daily inspection."

We will see when choosing the house or apartment that the kitchen is light, well ventilated and not too small. We will select one in which the wall space is used for cupboards rather than the adjoining dark closet, which often soon becomes a harbinger of untidy clutter and rubbish. Every shelf upon which pots or pans or other kitchen equipments are kept should be free and open to daily inspection. Therefore cupboards or shelves built into the walls, protected by large doors of glass or of wood, are far better than closets or cubby-holes.

A convenient contrivance is one set of shelves to hold all of the things in constant use, which is open entirely while work is going on and closed completely at other times. This is accomplished by a roller shade like those used for windows—the washable kind. This is rolled up out of the way during working hours. All kitchen shelves should receive at every house-cleaning period a coat of enamel paint, which, being smooth, is easily washed.

There should be two tables in every kitchen—one either of marble or covered with enamel cloth to be in the centre of the room, and the other near the range, covered with zinc. The one in the centre of the room should be rather long, with a set of drawers under each end and reaching to within cleaning distance of the floor. By "within cleaning distance of the floor" I mean that nothing should be so close to the floor as to prevent it or the floor from being cleaned without strenuous moving. In these drawers towels and small utensils may be kept, and between the sets of drawers there should be a place for a wooden stool to sit upon while doing the work, and the handiest thing to be found in a kitchen. The other table should also have one or two drawers divided into compartments for the spoons and forks, etc., so often needed right there near the stove.

The Stove Should Have a Hood

The stove or range, for gas or coal, should be covered by a high hood in order to remove the odors of cooking, and this process may be materially assisted by a small transom window high up in the outside wall to act as a ventilator.

Kitchen and butler's pantry windows should be furnished with washable shades so arranged as to be lowered from the top or raised from the bottom, or both at the same time, as the windows are opened for the free circulation of air, and the lower sash can be made attractive by hanging curtains of scrim, cheesecloth or percale.

The sink should be of porcelain, with slanting draining board on right side, and level board at the other side, and an adjustable six-armed towel rack at one end, just high enough to reach while standing at the sink. There will be cleats above the sink, furnished with numerous hooks, and another behind the stove or near to hold the aluminum or agateware stewpans that are in constant demand. If our bride was a French woman these cooking utensils would be of copper, mirror-like with constant scouring.

If it be a gas range it should stand a foot or eighteen inches from the wall, and this space filled with a zinc-covered shelf, upon which dishes or stewpans may keep their contents warm while the rest of the stove is in use.

One convenience that ought to be in every kitchen is the self-sifting tin flour bin, which holds a sack of flour and is fastened against the wall over a small shelf or table.

Here, too, is the coffee mill, for coffee must be bought in the bean if it would be at its best.

There should be at least two good wooden chairs in the kitchen and a rocker. The latter gives an air of comfort to the kitchen as well as to the maid who lives there.

Importance of Butler's Pantry.

The butler's pantry—which by courtesy is called a butler's pantry, although in the modest household the cook or waitress or maid of all work does duty as the butler—is the connecting link between kitchen and dining-room, and no modern house is complete without it. Here all the dishes used in the dining-room are kept, excepting those of the finest glass or china, and there is here also a zinc sink draining board and perhaps an extra rack for drying dishes. Two nickel towel holders should also find place here.

The choicest glass and china is really kept in a closet in the dining-room. Glass doors should protect the dishes in this pantry, while underneath the shelves and over sets of drawers and compartments should be a long, wide top upon which to place all dishes en route to and from the dining-room. This top should be covered with white enamelled cloth, which is soft, easily kept clean and cheaply renewed when worn.

There should be a refrigerator room or closet between pantry and kitchen, or conveniently adjacent, where all food may be kept cool and sweet. Besides the refrigerator, which in these days should be of the special variety that is lined with porcelain or glass, with separate compartment for butter, cream and milk, there should be a food safe and many shelves of glass or enameled wood, or covered with enameled cloth tightly tacked on. The food safe is a wooden frame filled with shelves upon which such supplies as need not be put into the refrigerator may be kept, except cake and bread. These should rest in tin receptacles of their own, or in closely covered jars. In this food room canned fruits, jellies and jams may be kept, all carefully marked and arranged on shelves. But there should be light here both daylight and artificial, and there should also be numerous side brackets for gas or electricity in kitchen and butler's pantry. This is one of the greatest drawbacks to apartments and flats—there is such a scarcity of light, and we need so much light in the kitchen especially.

The special things required for kitchen and pantry use are given below, and it is a very moderate collection, to be added to when made necessary by time and need. Utensils for laundry use are not given, as it is supposed that the laundry will all be sent out the first year of married life.

LINDA HULL LARNED.

How Earthquakes Telegraph Their Own News Through the Earth

NO matter where an earthquake occurs, it sends its own news all over the world almost instantaneously. Wherever there is an observatory equipped with the little instrument called the seismograph the message of disaster, perhaps in the uttermost parts of the earth, is received and recorded. Only such details as the number of lives lost and cities destroyed remain to be reported by other means.

The recent earthquake at Dharmsala, India, was duly registered by the seismograph in the observatory at Gottingen, and a record was also obtained at the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. The record began with some very minute tremors about 1 a. m., while the larger waves began about eight minutes later. The maximum disturbance was recorded about 1:30, and was followed by one of almost equal severity a minute and a half later. From that point the tremors were gradually reduced until 4:42 a. m. The difference of time between Edinburgh and Dharmsala is about five hours. Seismograms recording the earthquake were also obtained by Professor Milne, at Shide, Isle of Wight, and at the hydrographic station at Pola.

Professor John Milne may be rightly described as the leader of the new seismology. The new science of earthquake study began its work with the invention of the seismograph, which is an instrument used for analysing earthquake motion and recording it in conjunction with a time scale. By means of these instruments it became possible to inaugurate an entirely new [illegible] of investigations of the nature of earthquakes, and ultimately to create a new branch of science.

Professor Milne was not the first designer of the seismograph. The honor of its first design is due, perhaps, to Professor Ewing, of the Universities of Tokio and Cambridge; but in the new line of research a leader was necessary—one who was well versed in physical science, having a high faculty of initiative, and willing to make the study a life work. Such a leader was found in John Milne.

In the earliest stages of the new science, when it was furnishing more questions than answers, he had the field mostly to himself; but when the results began to appear and multiply, chiefly through his patience and industry, new workers entered the field. At present they are numerous, and Japan, Germany, Austria and Italy, as well as the United States and England, have many learned investigators.

The earliest form of seismoscope was, of course, one which signalled a tremor in the ground; but in order to gain a more instructive idea of the movement we need an instrument which will trace the whole motion automatically from the beginning of the quake to the end, showing at every instant the direction, the amplitude, and the frequency or periods of the vibrations. Such an instrument is called a "seismograph."

There is an intermediate class of instruments which give continuous records of the movements of the ground, and also show the directions and amplitudes, but do not unravel the various complicated motions. These are called seismometers. A seismograph is a far more complex instrument. Its first problem was, and is, to devise a "steady point"—that is to say, a mass which shall always remain at rest, while everything around it and even the support that upholds it is in a constant state of vibratory motion.

To attain it is far from easy; but, if it can be attained, then we can imagine a plate attached to it with a prepared surface capable of receiving and recording the movements of a pencil or point. And we can imagine a tracing pencil attached to supports which vibrate with the earth, and the other end resting lightly on the smoked (or surfaced) plate. Or we can imagine the thing reversed, and the tracing point attached to our unmoving, unmovable mass, and the smoked plate attached to the supports that vibrate with the earth.

In either case the movements of the earth will cause a traced line to be drawn on the plate, showing the motion of the earth, and the support, relative to the "steady point." In this way, though this is but a rough sketch of the theory of a very ingenious instrument, with many complexities and improvements for magnifying the extent of the motion, or rectifying the direction of the moving point, earthquakes are measured; and this is the principle of the beautiful "seismograph," which Milne and Ewing and Gray have perfected.

Professor Milne has mapped out the earthquake centres of origin of the world into eighteen great districts; and he regards the great earthquake of Northern India as having had its origin in the nearest of these great districts, the Himalayan seismic ellipse.

All this is made possible by the earthly rigidity due to the enormous pressure existing throughout its interior. It is a law of physics that in any concentric spherical surface the resistance of the enclosed nucleus must be just equal to the pressure of the surrounding shells resting upon it, and thus the strain upon the matter of the globe increases toward the centre.

This pressure is sustained by the increasing density and rising temperature of the matter in the earth's interior, which is thus under an inconceivable strain, far surpassing the strength of any known substance. As the matter is above the critical temperature of every element, it is essentially a gas reduced by pressure to a hardness greater than that of steel, and with an elasticity and rigidity infinitely near to perfection.

The result is that the explosive strain upon the matter of our globe from within, which is everywhere just equal to the pressure sustained by the enclosed nucleus, renders the interior matter more rigid than any known substance; and even the outer layers, which are but slightly compressed, yield so little under the action of external forces that the globe as a whole is more rigid than steel.

It is this extreme rigidity which causes vibrations of any shock, external or within the earth, to be transmitted throughout its whole bulk.

HOW YOU CAN REACH YOUR NORMAL WEIGHT

MOST persons weigh either more or less than nature intended them to weigh. They [illegible] either too fat or too lean, according to the standard set for them at birth.

How to ascertain and, having learned, to keep your weight at the normal standard, is a discovery Professor Ludwig Schweik, an eminent Swiss physician, claims to have made. The secret, Professor Schweik says, is dietary. He prescribes the amount of food to be taken daily as fourteen ounces of solid and sixteen ounces liquid refreshment. For breakfast he permits two ounces of rolls of the kind known as hard pigs, one cup of coffee or milk and a quarter of an ounce of butter.

Luncheon may consist of two ounces of scraped apple, eight ounces of scraped almonds, one tablespoonful of honey and a raw cereal, as oatmeal, or whole or shredded wheat, one soft boiled or hard boiled egg, according to taste, and one cup of soup, the soup taken at the end of the meal.

HUSBANDS WANTED BY WOMEN WHO DREW FREE HOMESTEADS

his good intentions by first planting and then harvesting a crop, all for the benefit of the woman upon whom he has his eye. He must show his worth and show that he wants the wife more than he wants the farm. Having been told this the letter will end with an invitation to the love-sick youth or old man, as the case may be, to report at Bonesteel and there go through a certain initiation, after which he will be given his answer from the girl he wants.

The young women have declared that the initiation shall consist of nothing but work. The man will be required to labor without cost as an ordinary farm laborer, doing what is required of an ordinary farm laborer, following the orders of the female owner of the farm in those things she understands and teaching her those things which she knows not of. If the lovesick boy or man survives the season, and the farm thrives and the crops he makes are bountiful, then he may go to his ladylove and press his suit, and if the women stand by their announced agreement he will in all probabilities secure a wife and a home.

In view of the fact that many a young woman has never received a proposal and is likely to be carried off her feet by some adventurer with a good, smooth way of writing things, this scheme to keep out undesirable men folks is expected to work tremendous good.

One feature of the scheme, however, is not altogether satisfactory to even the honest and hard-working candidates. They are willing to prove their sincerity by putting in a whole season of hard labor on a new farm, but they feel that it is asking a little too much to make them wholly responsible for that season's harvest.

They point out that harvests sometimes fail in spite of all the efforts of the most enlightened and industrious husbandman. What if this critical season happens to be one of great drought? There have been such seasons in South Dakota, when no amount of human effort could produce a crop. Or, suppose continued cold rains should drown out the corn and wheat? Or the voracious chinch bug should select this very year for a visit to the girl colony? Or grasshoppers should descend in clouds and devour every green thing, as they have many times?

In such events could the marriageable girl employer be depended upon to give credit to the suitor, who had had only his board and lodging to show for his labor, for having done all that mortal man could do, and reward him with her hand and farm accordingly? Isn't such a chance like buying 'a pig in a poke'—especially in the case of a faithful, industrious suitor who happens to be deficient in the arts of a lover?

Another thing that annoys the horny-handed, bucolic candidate is his knowledge that he will have to compete with spruce young college youths, who seek jobs as farm hands during the busy Summer season. What chance will he stand when these light-minded, chipper, flirtatious, banjo-playing fellows come around at the beginning of harvest when extra hands are needed?

But the girls have the farms and have made their conditions. They are not going a-begging for candidates. The man who "fears his fate too much" simply needn't apply, that's all.

STRANGE PETS, THE QUEEREST FAD OF FASHIONABLE SOCIETY.

How the Lap Dog and Tabby Cat Are Being Supplanted by Snakes, Lions, Bears and Even a Little Pink Pig, in Society

Miss Imogene Hall and Her Pet Lion on the Beach at Atlantic City.

BY RENE BACHE.

Do you own a baby bear?

If not, you ought to get one as soon as possible, because a bear is the latest and most fashionable kind of pet.

There is nothing so delightfully fuzzy and jolly to pet as a brown or black bear's cub. Playful as a kitten, too, and as affectionate and docile as a pup. You can get one for from $25 to $50, which is by no means expensive, when you consider that a little dog of any respectable breed costs at least as much as that.

Miss Bell, the Washington banker's daughter, has a baby bear named Teddy, which is simply too precious for anything. He takes his milk from a bottle held in his mistress's hand, and follows her all around the house, upstairs and downstairs—particularly upstairs, because he is afraid to come down.

The only drawback about a baby bear as a pet is that it will grow. If it could only "stay little," and remain as it is at three or four months of age—a fuzzy-wuzzy, cunning ball of fat and fur, nothing could be more satisfactory. But it persists in getting bigger, and, sooner or later, though it does not usually become in the least vicious or dangerous in that way, it gets rough in its play, and on that account hardly safe for the intimate companionship of a lady.

There is a veritable craze for odd pets at present, and the queerer and more out-of-the-way they are the better. If you are to be considered thoroughly fashionable, you must possess a tame deer, a talking crow or something else quite exceptional.

If you cannot conveniently get a baby bear, a little pig will make a good substitute. Three or four fashionable women in New York have recently adopted small porkers, which, in fact, may be said to be the latest thing in pets. Nothing can possibly be more cunning, and any notion that their habits unfit them for the boudoir would not be correct.

A pig is one of the cleanest of animals. It greatly dislikes dirt and has a particular fondness for fresh water. If a human being were shut in a pen six feet square and never permitted to leave it he would be no more cleanly than the everyday hog. But little piggie, bathed at intervals in the porcelain tub, and cared for as a pet should be, is a model of neatness. At the same time he is intelligent and devoted, following his owner all over the house and setting up a squeal of delight when she returns from a walk and gives him a hug.

Princess de Lucinge and Her Pet Baby Lion.

Mrs. Thompson Seton Teaching Her Pet Bears to Drink from a Bottle.

Sooner or later the little pig, like the baby bear, grows up and, in consequence, loses its availability as a pet. The bear has to be given away to the Zoo, and piggy may find his way to the butcher's. But, though it is a wrench to part with him, there are always plenty of other little pigs, and they all look a good deal alike.

Now, speaking of talking crows, a very remarkable one was exhibited at the last Sportsmen's Show in Madison Square Garden. It was bought by Henry S. Harper. Among the things it said were, "Hello!" "Good morning!" and "How are you?" This crow was reared and taught to speak by a Washington dealer in animals, who advertises that he furnishes "anything from a white mouse to a white elephant." Already he has trained quite a number of talking crows, to supply a demand which is rapidly increasing.

The method adopted is decidedly curious, a phonograph being set up in front of a cage containing the crows, and so arranged as to repeat the same phrase loudly all day long. A small water mill attached to a spigot keeps the phonograph going, so that no expense is involved, and the time occupied in the business of instruction is only crow time.

By this kindergarten system the young crows, which are taken from the nests when they are hardly fledged, are taught as many words or phrases as they are able to acquire. Of course, some of the birds are smarter than others, just as is the case with parrots, but the all-important thing is that their training should begin when they are very young. The crow is a remarkably clever fowl, and, though it does not learn to speak as many phrases as the parrot, it enunciates with a greater and more human-like distinctness.

President Roosevelt, when in Washington, rides nearly every day past the little farm maintained for the rearing of pets by the dealer aforesaid, and one of the crows has been taught to scream at him, "Hurrah for Teddy!" As might be imagined, he shouts the same thing at other people, but the President has been much amused, and has even paused to make the acquaintance of the bird. Lest it be deemed surprising that a crow's voice could "carry" so far, one should recollect for how great a distance a "caw" can be heard under ordinary circumstances. The remarks of the talking crow bought by Henry S. Harper could be heard all over the Madison Square Garden while it was on exhibition there.

Crows are plentiful, and therefore cheap enough, when untrained. In one rookery just across the Potomac from Washington there are, as has been estimated, at least 300,000 of the birds, and there is no trouble in getting them from the nests. But a well-trained talking crow is worth anywhere from $25 to $500, according to the extent of its linguistic accomplishments.

Pet Deer for Summer Homes.

It is decidedly the fashion, if you live in the country, to have a tame deer for a pet. Nothing could be more beautiful or more ornamental, but a doe is best for a lady to keep, because the male, when grown up, is liable to be vicious, and even dangerous at the mating season. For the decoration of a lawn, in the immediate neighborhood of a house, what could be more lovely or more appropriate than two or three mild-eyed deer, cropping the herbage, and perhaps approaching the porch now and then to beg for a lump of sugar out of the hand of a lazy mistress lying in a hammock with her novel on a Summer's afternoon?

"A well-known actress bought a pet deer from me only the other day," said the Washington dealer, who raises the talking crows. "Ever so many people are going in for that sort of thing nowadays, and are buying various kinds of wild animals for their estates in the country. When possible, they want something unusual. At this very moment I have orders for black swans, Chinese quail, owls, eagles, cormorants, ibises, sandhill cranes and white peafowl. These are only a few of the birds I have to supply. Wild ducks are in special demand, because, when domesticated to some extent, they are extremely ornamental as occupants of ponds and small lakes.

"It is becoming the fashion in London to keep snakes as pets, and I have sent a number of such reptiles to England recently for this purpose. Women over there pretend to like and admire them, and I suppose that New York will take up the fad before long, inasmuch as the "smart set" of the American metropolis copies everything that is done by the British aristocracy. Only bright colored serpents, such as garter snakes, are in demand. Doubtless they make charming playthings, but one might imagine that a young man calling upon a lady would be discouraged to find her attention divided between himself and an affectionate ophidian.

"You see, I am called upon to ship these snakes to England because in that country there are almost as few as in Ireland. In fact, they are so scarce as to be decidedly a curiosity. But, when it comes to queer pets, I cannot imagine anything more odd than a baby jaguar. Only a few weeks ago I obtained from Mexico a jaguar two months old for Mr. Warren Archibald, of Brockton, Mass. He is going to try to raise it and keep it tame but, though it is gentle and harmless enough at present, I fear that it is likely to become savage when it grows up. A jaguar, you know, is a rather ferocious beast.

"I sold a lot of wild ducks to Mr. Peter G. Gerry, a short time ago, and some more to Mr. W. W. Harrison, the Philadelphia sugar magnate. These and other water fowl are in steadily increasing demand for country estates. Of course, when I speak of wild ducks, I mean the progeny of various non-domesticated varieties bred in confinement. Being hatched under conditions of domesticity and well fed, they usually exhibit no inclination to fly away.

"For E. Thompson Seton I have obtained some jack rabbits, and for Richard Mansfield a lot of quail. At the present time, by the way, I am making experiments, which have been quite successful, in the hatching and rearing of domesticated quail, placing the eggs under pigeons. The pigeons do not seem to know the difference and make most satisfactory mothers.

"For a water space on a country estate nothing can be more decorative than a few flocks of domestic and wild swans and wild ducks, the latter including canvas backs and redheads perhaps, with a possible sprinkling of widgeon and spoon-billed "shovellers." For Mr. Fred Gallatin, by the way, I recently secured a number of sandhill cranes, which, as they stand here and there on one leg along the shore of a little lake, lend a solemn picturesqueness to the scene.

Eagles, Squirrels and Beavers.

"I sold an eagle the other day to Mr. H. O. Havemeyer, the sugar magnate. For Paul Morton, the new president of the Equitable, I got a lot of squirrels. There is nothing prettier than squirrels on a country estate. E. H. Litchfield, who owns a great estate in the Adirondacks, bought some beaver from me a while ago. It is easy enough to persuade beaver to take up a permanent residence in a stream, where they will build their dams and make themselves interesting to visitors.

Beavers are worth from $50 to $100 apiece. I have a pair of them which live in a zinc-lined tank, a stream flowing through, and, being supplied with plenty of earth and twigs, they build as contentedly as they would in a state of nature. When, as at present, they are on exhibition, the dam and mud hut they construct are pulled down as soon as finished, and they are obliged to begin all over again. An important point with beaver, by the way, is to take them when they are young—a remark which may be said to apply to any kind of wild creature that is to be kept under conditions of even semi-domestication.

"Such large prices are paid nowadays for odd pets and for out-of-the-way animals wanted for country estates that I spare neither effort nor expense in trying to secure them. Thus, for example, I am expecting from Alaska a couple of specimens of the rare 'Emperor goose,' which breeds only within the limits of a tract twenty miles in length on the coast of our Arctic province. Most costly of all the show birds of America, and therefore most desirable, is the beautiful whooping crane, which is worth $250. It is extremely wary, and on that account difficult to capture, roosting always on some small island in a broad water space. One of these cranes, by the way, is on exhibition at the New York Zoo.

"It is noticeable that wild birds wanted for such purposes in this country are American species, and not foreign varieties. The more beautiful their plumage, of course, the more desirable they are. White peafowl are in considerable demand at $100 a pair. They are not so very rare, and, although albinos, will breed 'true.' One might say that albinos in general are highly prized—especially white deer, which are worth $150 apiece. There are albinos among all animals, of course, even including human beings, and white squirrels are already fairly common. You can buy one for $50. I have at the present time a white raccoon, a white woodchuck and white opossum. The opossum is worth $125, but you can buy an ordinary opossum for $5.

"An odd point about bears is that they grow less valuable as they get older. A small cub may be worth $50, but when he is a year old his price is liable to drop to $5, inasmuch as he cannot be kept as a pet much longer than that. They have been breeding bears for some years past, by the way, in a trolley railroad park near Cleveland, Ohio, and have been very successful at it. A female should produce two or three cubs a year, but care has to be taken lest she eat them up.

"I spoke a moment ago of selling quail to Richard Mansfield. He bought at the same time for his little son a kit of silkworms. Of course, a silkworm is a domesticated animal just as much as a cat, and may be 'raised a pet.' But I have found that the best way to raise them is not to keep them in the house, after the ordinary method, but to put them on mulberry trees out of doors and let them feed themselves. In due time they will spin their cocoons on the branches. This is a plan which I am going to suggest to the Department of Agriculture, inasmuch as the Government is now engaged in making experiments in rearing silkworms.

Miss Rosamond Dixey, of Boston, Ready for Her Afternoon Drive in the Park with Her Pet Pig.

Another animal that has suddenly become valuable for the ornamentation, so to speak, of country estates is the zebra. It is a very beautiful creature and is rare enough to be worth a high price—say, $400 for a good specimen. Nothing can be prettier than one or more of these graceful creatures trotting about on a millionaire's suburban farm. Sometimes they can be trained to draw a carriage, but they do not respond readily to such education, and in many instances they never become really manageable."

Miss Lillian Sanderson, of California, one of the best known society favorites of the Pacific coast, has a pet rattlesnake named Bob. She feeds him with her own hand and lets him coil up in her lap, where he blinks amiably and holds up his chin to be tickled with her forefinger.

Miss Imogene Hall and her baby lion attracted great attention at Atlantic City and in Europe. Her sister Mae has a tiger cub. The two twin sisters with their dangerous-looking but good-natured pets caused no end of amazement at Atlantic City. They are rivals of the Princess de Lucinge and her famous baby lion.

Lady Marjorie Greville, the lovely daughter of the lovelier Countess of Warwick, has many beast friends. She drives a reflective gray donkey and is followed all over the grounds of Warwick Castle by Moses, a spotless white lamb. Her three collies, Faith, Hope and Charity, are also at her heels, and never on any occasion fail to treat the lamb with courtesy.

Bostonians are occasionally given a chance to see a pink-nosed, carefully washed, scraped and polished young pig carried about in the arms of its fashionable mistress, Miss Rosamond Dixey.

Little Miss Ivy Bostock, daughter of the famous animal trainer, has the advantage over all the others in having ready access to a great number of animals.

A python is her favorite, and seems to enjoy being pulled and tied into knots by its mistress.

Quite naturally Mrs. Thompson Seton, wife of the artist and writer of animal stories, has many wild pets. She has two bear cubs which have been taught to drink out of a bottle in her hands.

SAM LOYD'S OWLS IN SCHOOL

HOW MANY WORDS HAVE THEY LEARNED TO SPELL?

"Now, children," said Mrs. Owl, "the class in spelling will please pay attention. I have given each of you a letter. You must take them home and study the five letters and your own name too, and then see how many words you can make them spell. I know at least a dozen words you can spell with them without having to stop to think."

IT IS THE CZAR'S TURN TO TREMBLE NOW

He and his fathers have flogged, shot, exiled and imprisoned hundreds of thousands. They have made others tremble with their beating of women, flogging to death of peasants. The hour glass is turned upside down, the sands are running the other way. It is the turn of the weak, brutal Czar to worry.

As your newspaper reaches you each day, follow with care the news that comes from Russia. Great work is being done in that country. One of the last strongholds of despotism, superstition—of THAT BRUTALITY THAT ALWAYS GOES WITH DESPOTISM AND SUPERSTITION—is giving way.

No mind can grasp the crimes that have been committed in the name of the Russian Government. For every hair on the head of that worthless, arrogant, brutal and cowardly Czar, good men and good women have died.

The fight seemed a long, desperate and hopeless one

There was a moment of enthusiasm when a long struggle brought about the freeing of the serfs. Although it was freedom in name only, and although the men that had lived as serfs in a state of dull security were murdered and lashed to make them pay impossible taxes—still the principle was admitted, and that was something.

Following upon this concession there came a period of absolute reaction, persecution and brutality worse than any that Russia had seen. The day seemed hopeless, many of the best men and women left Russia or sank into that state of non-protesting despair.

* * *

Still the struggle was kept up. As each man went into Siberia or into the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, or died under the knout, another was found to take his place.

Those that are ignorant of the magnificent story of the Russian people talk of this Russian uprising as though it were something sudden, without adequate cause.

As a matter of fact no people have ever lived that have done as much to deserve liberty as the Russian people have done.

Utter disregard of their own lives, of their own happiness, of their own property, has marked the noble men and women of the Russian movement "toward the people."

We see one Russian writer and friend of the people, as a mere matter of course, freeing his ten thousand serfs long before the law would have freed them, GIVING THEM HIS LAND ON WHICH THEY LIVED and condemning himself to poverty.

We see another writer and worker for the people protesting until he became an epileptic; but, with what force was left in him, he kept up his protest

She did attract attention. She shot and killed the governor that had abused the helpless prisoners.

When she was condemned to death and taken from her husband, imprisoned with her, she forbade him to reveal the fact that she was about to become a mother.

Under the Russian law a woman in that condition cannot be executed. But this Russian woman preferred that she SHOULD be executed, knowing that her condition at the time of her death must be made public, and that it would strengthen the hands of the revolutionary leaders.

* * *

In every Russian village, for years back, there has been a man or a woman of education secretly educating the peasants, distributing literature among them.

In the factories, thousands of Russian women of refinement and education have worked the long hours, year in and out, that they might have a chance to talk to and educate the Russian girls

Every university in Europe has had its number of Russian men and women getting information that they might return to Russia and educate their people.

Siberia has been peopled with the noblest men and women of the Russian nation; the road to Siberia has been marked with their bodies, as they fell on the journey.

In the peasant's hut and in the Czar's palace the work of revolution and emancipation has gone on.

A man like Tolstoi, with his fifteen thousand acres of land and his three thousand horses, his title and his large fortune, preferred a life of labor and of danger to a life of ease. His gigantic talent and the world's love for him alone have saved him from exile or execution.

A man like Gorky, with the strength and determination of his peasant mother and the intellect of an educated father, has lived with the poorest workers, starved with them.

AND IN A DARK CELLAR UNDER THE SIDEWALK THIS MAN'S BRAIN HAS HELPED TO DO THE WORK THAT COULD NOT BE COUNTERACTED BY THE CZAR AND ALL HIS SOLDIERS.

* * *

Now has arrived the critical time in the history of the nation that has made so brave and so desperate a struggle for liberty.

Beaten and humiliated abroad, threatened at home, the Czar and his despotic government begin to see ahead of them the fate that they have dealt out to so many others

Their armed soldiers murdered unarmed Jews at Kishineff. The Jews have been among the best workers and the bravest in the revolutionary movement. And at least one Jew, whom the Czar overlooked in his murdering expeditions, is on board the rebel ship Potemkin as a leader of the men.

* * *

Superstitious, conceited, cowardly and brutal, the Czar of Russia looks ahead with trembling. Without pity or remorse, he has murdered thousands for their religion and tens of thousands for their love of liberty

He took the lives of women, simply because they spoke against his brutalities and misgovernment. How can he hope that his life will be spared when it comes into the hands of those that he has murdered so freely?

The Russian nation is truly great among the peoples of the world. There is enormous vitality, genius, power of all kinds, in that great mixture of races, ruled over by the former Princes of Moscow.

Soon that rule is to end. The Russian genius that has been compelled to work underground, groping toward liberty, will work in the open sunlight for the building up of another great free nation, a bulwark of human happiness and freedom, as long as humanity shall last on the earth.

The High Calling of Fatherhood

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

AN essay on the "Divine Path, from the Source of Life to Earth," has called forth an appeal from many women for further discussion of the subject.

Physicians also add their commendation of this discussion, and one woman suggests that copies of the essays be addressed to presidents of colleges, so that prospective husbands be trained to the high calling of fathers of the race.

"Many and many a poor wife does not have the considerate treatment accorded her which is given the female horse or dog," says the letter beneath my eye, and no man dare deny the truth of this reproach upon all mankind.

Then it adds: "Of all the animals in the world there is no male that treats his mate as inconsiderately as does man, especially at the time in her life when she most needs his care. I sometimes think that the State should, for its own protection, look after poor women in that condition; for criminals, idiots, etc., are produced by ill-treatment of the mother before she bears the child."

That would, indeed, be a great and noble enterprise for our Government. Our present Chief Executive has urged the women of the United States to become mothers. This is a simple and easy request to make of a woman. But since no man has ever known the experience which motherhood entails, and only the most sympathetic and sensitive of physicians can even grasp a part of the mental and physical process, it behooves the most authoritative of mankind to look into the conditions surrounding the rank and file of women in the land before asking them to assume the responsibilities of motherhood.

There could be no more important work for a nation than the establishing of institutions and the training of men and women for the proper knowledge of THE RIGHT GENERATION OF HUMAN BEINGS.

New York City provides a fund for a large aquarium. The Zoo is another city institution where young animals are protected before birth and after; and should the male animal indicate dangerous tendencies toward his mate before the birth of the young or afterward toward his offspring he is at once placed where he cannot do damage.

No stock breeder would permit his brood animal to suffer injury at such a period; she is protected in every way in order that her offspring may be strong and well.

Yet all over the United States expectant mothers (of the children our President is so anxious should be multiplied indefinitely) are left to the careless and ignorant treatment of men who know no more about the responsibilities of fatherhood, or of pre-natal influences, than they know of the social conditions of Mars.

In the lower walks of life, where people are crowded in small rooms and obliged to live in close quarters, expectant mothers are forced to endure the odors of cheap drink and tobacco and to hear taunts and insults from intoxicated husbands, who have never been told that a woman is sensitive to an abnormal degree at this period of her life; and in the higher walks thousands of mothers are suffering from neglect and indifference or from refined abuse from husbands who are college graduates and who occupy important positions socially.

It would be an admirable undertaking for the Government to establish in each large city a free institution where such women could pass two or three hours each day, when conveniently located with cheerful surroundings, and three or four months, at a nominal price, if unfortunately situated at home. Whatever the original expense of such an undertaking might necessitate, it would be saved in a generation by the lessening of disease and crime and poverty among the masses.

Added to this, every college should be obliged to add a department through which every young man must pass before granted a diploma. The most skilled physicians should be employed as instructors in this department. It is quite as important to the world that young men know what it means to propagate the species as that they become such expert athletes that Yale conquers Harvard or Harvard Princeton at football. Many cases might be found, if the annals of the courts were studied, where men who graduated with brilliant honors from famous colleges proved brutal husbands to wives who were expectant mothers. The man's brain has been filled with all kinds of knowledge save that which gave him an understanding of fatherhood and motherhood. However disillusioned or enraged he may become with a woman he has chosen as his wife, there not one man in a million who would mis his own unborn child once he understood vital influence of the mother's mind upon during those months. Women are beginni to understand these matters, and moth are awakening to the fact that daught must be educated along these lines if th ever contemplate marriage.

But how is it possible for a mother to g her child wholesome, and sane, and health pre-natal conditions if men continue to wa in blind, black ignorance, and if the laws the land make no provision for the mother protection and offer no asylum for her treat from disastrous environment at th important time? It is the great work of future, the vital subject of the present N until the intelligent and educated class realize this and call science to aid in education of men as fathers can we hope a marked improvement in the human race

Mirandy on the Summer Vacation

By Dorothy Dix

"I RECKONS you'll have to git somebody else to do yo' wash for de next month," said Mirandy, as she deposited the basket of clothes on the floor, "caze I'se gwine off on a Summer vacation.

"I wonder why Ike is so bow-legged"

"I'se gwine to take a rest, an' I'se gwine to give Ike one, caze I'se a merciful woman, an' I b'lieves dat ev'y wife ought to give her husband de chanst to slip de yoke of matrimony ev'y now an' den so as to ease his neck a little, an' let de galled places git well.

"Yassum, after a man has done fetcht his pay envelope home ev'y Saturday night, an' has gone to roost wid de chickens, an' has had to hold his breathe when he come near his wife, ef he had stopped by de corner saloon, an' has wound up de clock, an' put de cat out of doors ev'y night fer leben months, he sholy does need a holiday. Yassum, he's done earned it, an' it's a mighty ornery kind of a wife dat'll begrudge it to him.

Yassum, a woman dat won't let up on de henpecking once a year sho am a po' sperited creeter, an' when I hears dese devoted wives a settin' up prognosticating about how dey never is left dey husbands, nor let deir husbands git out of deir sight, I sut'ny does feel lak calling in de aid of dis heah society fer de pertection of dumb animals. Yassum, I reckons one of dese heah affectionate wives what you can't shake Winter nor Summer is one of de worst afflictions dat de good Lawd can send on a man.

"Yassum, I'se gwine to travel some fer Ike's health, caze dey ain't nuthin' in dis world dat peartens a man up so lak gittin' rid of his wife's society, even ef it ain't but fer two or three weeks, an' I allus notices dat when I gits back home off of my vacation dat Ike looks lak he done took de rest cure. He's dat spryed up dat you'd think dat he was a fresh widower—an' I guess deys de freshest things going.

"An' taint no wonder. It's jest nachul. Time a man an' a woman has lived together fer leven months out of de year deys got enough, an' mo' dan enough, of each other's company. Deys told each other ev'y thing dey knows, an' ev'y thing dey thinks dey knows, an' de conversation kinder runs low in de bin, an' den to make talk dey begin to argufy an' den dey begin to scrap, an' mos' generally dey lands in de divorce court, or de cop comes an' runs dem in for making a rough house.

"An' deys dis funny thing, too, about matrimony. It's lak gazing at de sun. After you is looked too long an' too steady at de pardner of yo' bosom you don't see nuthin' but spots. Dey's des covered wid blemishes ontel you can't see nuthin' good in 'em an' de best cure fer it is den to break away an' go an' look at something else tell it rests yo' eyes.

"We are so glad to see each other after vacation."

"Dat's de way wid me an' Ike. We sashshays along mighty comfortable in double harness fer a while, an' den some day I begins to feel lak I'll throw de coffee pot at Ike's head ef he tells dat old story over one mo' time 'bout how he would have won de prize in de policy—ef somebody else hadn't a got it.

"Den Ike he introduces de subject of infant immersion, knowing dat I is a deep water Baptist—dat we begun fighting 'bout befo' our first baby was born, an' we is still fighting over, dough our youngest child is thutty years old.

"Den Ike, he ups and axes me ef I don't think I'se taking on flesh, an' I wonders ef Ike was as bowlegged when I married him as he is now, an' den I knows dat de time has come fer me or Ike, one or de odder, to git away, an' git off de odder one's nerves.

"Yassum, when I starts off all dat I can see in Ike is a po', runty little nigger, wid a bald head, an' stooped shoulders, an' crooked legs, but I haven't been gone mo' dan three days befo' he sorter improves in my mind when I thinks about him.

"By de end of de first week I finds I is a bragging to de odder women dat I meets about whut a fine, personable looking man, wid an' intellectual brow, I is married to, an' by de time I gits ready to come home dat old nigger sut'ny does look good to me, an' I wouldn't trade him off for all de fine young bucks wid de college diplomys you could round up in a ten-acre field. Nawm, dat I wouldn't.

"An' it's de same way wid Ike. Cose Ike has got too good manners to tell me dat he's glad I'se going. Yassum, Ike was raised by a gentleman, an' he knows how to act under de circumstance jest lak a white gentleman, so he tell me dat he's mighty sorry I'se gwine an' dat de house will be mighty lonesome widout me, but he don't fool me none. Nawm.

"Deys a lot of resignation in his looks, an' I knows dat he's thinking dat he gwine to play craps half of de night, an' drink all de beer he can hold, an' dat hits gwine to be mighty restful to come home at 3 o'clock in de mornin' an' not find a woman waiting up fer him wid a flatiron. Furdermo', I knows dat all Ike sees in me is a fat woman dat waddles as she walks, an' dats got a tongue about a yard long.

"But I ain't been gone long befo' Ike finds out dat he done lost all of his money in de crap game, an' de beer make his head ache, an' dat he's mos' pizened hisself on his own cooking, an' den it begin to git sorter proned in on him dat a wife whut keeps things clean an' neat, an' knows how to cook is a sorter handy thing to have around de house, an' dat he's kinder got out of de way of being a sport, anyway.

"Den I comes home, an' you better believe he's glad to see me, an' I'se glad to see him, an' de ve'y first word he says to me is:

"'Land of Goshen, Mirandy, how you is fell off! I declare to gracious dey ain't none of dese fresh young gals dat's got a figger lak yourn.'

"An' I 'spon's, 'I has to be a good look to match you, for ef anybody has seen handsomer man dan you is, dey has out travelled me.'

"An' we des as cam an' saterfied wid each odder as a basket of chips, but ef we had

Little Bobbie's Essay on Summer Drinks

By William F. Kirk

"Stand in front of yer jest when you want to see a double play, an' say, 'Rite here is whare you git yure cold drinks, five a glass.'"

I AM not feeling vary well this morning. I cud feal those drinks packing down in my stummick & I sed to myself By heck he speeks the truth.

Thare is moar temptashun about summer drinks than to go in a saloon. to git a drink in a saloon you have first to find the saloon, then you must open the doar & give yure order & pay for it, but everywhare you go you git summer drinks shoved at yure nose. when you are going to the ball gaim thare is a lot of men standing along the sidewalk, saying Ice cold lemunaid, maid in the shaid! & when you git to the gaim & sit down a fat man walks along & stands in front of you jest when you want to see a double play & says Rite here is whare you git yure cold drinks, five a glass.

the wurst thing about summer drinks is that all the gurls you know can drink so many of them. one nite last weak I had 2 $ and 60 cents. I was saving it to git me a nice bathing suit and I met a litel gurl I knew & she sed lets walk up to the house & git my sister & her friends & we will talk a walk, so when we got to the house thare was 5 gurls & all of them calm along. I sed lets walk along the shore of the butiful Hudson but the gurls sed O lets not, lets go whare thare is sum drug stores, so thay led me over to a drug store & thay all had a drink, that made 60 cents so all I had left was my 2 $ I sed to myself Never mind, I can git a cheeper suit, but when we got outside thay dragged me to another store. I was jest going past when one of the gurls sed This is the nicest store in Harlem, the Sundays here are jest luvly & the ice cream sodas too, so I had to go in, thay all had another drink & one of the gurls sed That taists like moar, so I had to buy agenn. that left me 80 cents & the gurls looked jest as thirsty as ever, then I sed to the man behind Well, doan't the house ever loosen up & buy a drink & he put on a face like Tom Sharkey and shook his hed, so I had to buy another. that left me 20 cents & I lost that on the way hoam, I guess I spent it foolishly, I doant remember.

I think what we need is a soft drink Carrie Nashun, to taik her hatchet & brake up sum of them fountains in the drug stores. thay are sending the yung to destruckshun & keaping me from taiking a swim too. the Bible says the snake gave Eve a apple, but I think it was a soft summer drink he gave her. I hoap the snow will cum sune

The Midnight Sun

By Garrett P. Serviss

"WHAT is the 'midnight sun,' anyway, and how does it happen to be?" asks a correspondent.

There is something so poetic in the suggestions conveyed to the mind by the name, "midnight sun," that the phenomenon in question is one of the most popular of all that astronomy deals with, and about this time of the year we hear a great deal about it. Yet comparatively few, apparently, understand what it really means. The name is given to the appearance which the solar orb presents at the hour of midnight as seen at the time of the Summer solstice from places situated near the Arctic Circle. There is a "midnight sun" at just the opposite time of the year in the Southern hemisphere, but there are no inhabited lands from which it can be observed.

The phenomenon consists in the apparent poising of the disk of the sun on the edge of the Northern horizon just as the clocks in other parts of the world are striking twelve midnight, and its explanation depends upon the inclination of the earth's axis from a perpendicular to the plane in which the earth revolves around the sun.

A little consideration of the accompanying diagram should remove all mystery concerning this beautiful phenomenon. Remember, to begin with, that as the earth goes onward on its annual journey about the sun it keeps the axis on which it turns once every twenty-four hours always pointing in the same absolute direction. But, that axis being inclined, it follows that when the earth is at one point in its orbit the North Pole leans away from the sun, and when it is at the opposite point the same pole leans toward the sun. The amount of inclination of the axis being about 23½ degrees, that same angle, 23½ degrees, represents the distance to which the sun appears to move, now north and now south of the Equator. At the Summer solstice (June 21) the sun appears 23½ degrees north of the Equator, and at the Winter solstice (December 22) he appears 23½ degrees south of the Equator.

Now, our diagram represents the situation on the 21st of June. "N" indicates the North Pole and "S" the South Pole. The sun is 23½ degrees above, or north of the Equator. It results, as shown in the diagram, that the sun shines across the North Pole, and its light extends 23½ degrees beyond, and all that part of the earth situated within that number of degrees of the North Pole and inclosed within an imaginary circle, called the "Arctic Circle," is perpetually illumined.

The sun does not set there at all, while the earth rotates on its axis as shown by the arrows in the diagram.

Imagine yourself then to be placed at the point "A." It is noon there. The straight line drawn through "A" tangent to the surface of the earth represents the horizon at that point. If placed there you would see the sun elevated above the southern part of the horizon to the degree of the angle between the two lines indicated by the little row of dots.

Next imagine yourself carried around by the rotation of the earth to the point "B." You reach that point at the hour of midnight, or twelve hours after noon, when you were at "A." Now at "B" you perceive the direction of the sun exactly corresponds with that of the horizon line drawn through "B." In other words, the sun at midnight as seen from "B" is poised just upon the horizon toward the north. That is the phenomenon called the "midnight sun." All through the day the sun has circled in the sky, gradually sinking after noon and approaching the north, and at the hour of midnight it just reaches the north point and just touches the horizon, without setting. In a few minutes you would see the sun rising again and getting gradually higher and farther from the horizon, until at noon it would come back, having described a great circle in the sky, to the point above the southern horizon which it seems to occupy when viewed from "A."

If you were nearer the pole than the poin "B" it is clear that the sun would not touch the horizon at all, though it would dip down near it, while if you were farther from the pole than "B" the sun would disappear unde the horizon, to emerge again from some point on its eastern edge, and the farther you went toward the Equator the farther from the north point the sun would set and rise, and the longer the darkness of night would last.

To see the "midnight sun" it is customary to go to the coast of Norway, near where it is cut by the Arctic Circle. Owing to the refraction of the air apparently lifting the disk of the sun above the horizon, the phenomenon can be seen about half a degree (say thirty-five miles) south of the true line of the Arctic Circle.

An inspection of the diagram shows that about the southern pole exactly the opposite state of affairs exists. There it is perpetual night within 23½ degrees of the pole, or within the Antarctic Circle, and an observer at "C" would, when it is noon at places farther north, just catch sight of the sun for a few minutes peeping over the northern horizon, while when he was at "D" he would be in the middle of a longer night than that prevailing anywhere else outside the tw polar circles.

Boston Landlords Seem to Be Putting Big Premium on Race Suicide by Refusing to Admit the Babies to Apartment Houses in Aristocratic Portions of the City.

By Eleanor Ames

BELIEVE me, Councilman "Bill" Foley is right.

The landlords and agents have one song:

"If you've got any children, then you needn't come round."

House hunting in Boston for a mother brings not only weariness of the flesh and sinking of the heart, but a dulling of the maternal instinct.

It's easy enough to find a place where you and the dog and the cat can live, but to find a place where they want the babies is another matter.

If you have children in need of a home you have my heartfelt sympathy.

I know what your position is.

It is the suburbs for you, or else an uncongenial street or an attic house.

In Boston apartment houses there is no demand for tenants with children and precious little tolerance.

When I talked with Councilman Foley about his bill regarding landlords and their antipathy to children I thought he was extreme in his views.

I was wrong and flippant in my ignorance.

I am now a wiser woman and one more tired.

My imagination is strong, but I could not create from it a family of small children of which I was supposed to be the mother. So I borrowed a friend and her family of four children, the oldest ten, the youngest three.

Content in her [illegible] home, she has no idea that I have been trying to settle her in Boston. And it is well that she wasn't want to come, for, verily, I don't know where she and the "kiddies" would lay their heads.

It was my intention when I started out to prove the truth about poor people having difficulty finding a place to live amid decent surroundings, when a number of children were included in the family, but I became so interested that I ran the gamut of rent rates. I found places at $20 a month where children were unwelcome; places for $50 a month where they were not received, and places at $1,800 a year where they were refused with a decision which was courteous, but quite beyond appeal.

In the suburbs the ban seems to be lifted.

You can find attractive apartments in Roxbury, Dorchester, Somerville, Chelsea, South Boston and City Point at rentals ranging from $18 to $25 or $30, and including from four to six rooms and flats where children are not frowned at.

In Brookline, too, there seems to be less objection to them, but I found it in several instances to be rather a conditional non-objection.

"Of course," several agents told me, "we would much prefer to have tenants without children, but it is not always possible to get them, and we would rather accept the children than have the apartments stand idle."

In several instances I was told that it was not so much the objections of the landlords as of the other tenants.

"Oftentimes a first floor apartment will be rented to a family with one or two children, but you will find that four children are not wanted in many apartments," I was told by one agent, who controls the leasing of some of the most desirable apartments in the Back Bay.

"People without children do not want to be annoyed or disturbed by other people's children. And even the best child must make more or less noise."

"Would you object to a dog?" I asked, "or a cat?"

"Not a small house dog," he replied, "unless it barked and disturbed people, or destroyed property. And a cat—well, I don't see what objection there would be to a cat, providing the tenant kept it in his own apartment and did not allow it to become a nuisance.

I thought of a certain gleesome cat I knew, full of life and mischief, who chooses 4 a. m. as his awakening time, and celebrates daybreak by rolling a catnip ball about on the polished floors, and who sharpens his claws on the wall paper.

Four Children, Too Many.

The first call I made was at an agent's on Columbus avenue.

I explained that I wanted a medium priced apartment in a good neighborhood.

He looked over his lists. "Here's one for $30," he said. "There are six rooms and bath, right on the avenue here. All in good repair. Plumbing has just been looked over and approved."

"Would there be any objection to children?" I asked.

"How many?"

"Four."

He shook his head.

"They wouldn't lease that to a family with children," he said.

"Why not?"

"There aren't any in the house. The landlord doesn't want them, and the other tenants won't stand for them."

"Well, what have you to show me where they will take children?"

He looked over his list again.

"There's one on Westland avenue," he said, "splendid apartment, six light rooms, bath, all in first class order. You might try that. It is $50 a month. Would your friend want to pay that much?"

"If they would let the children in she might."

"Well, I'm not sure about four. Four children is a good many. Why don't she go into the suburbs?"

I went from there to Huntington avenue.

The office was attractive, and a charming young woman was on duty.

"We have some lovely apartments," she said cheerily. "It's a good season just now. Here is one seven rooms and bath on St. Botolph street, $65. Here's another eight and bath and spare room in the basement, all separate, can be locked up, right on Huntington avenue, for $75. That's really a swell apartment."

Might Take One Child

"Would they take children?"

She pursed her lips up and drew her forehead in a frown.

"They might take one," she said dubiously. "How old a child?"

"There are four, the oldest ten, the youngest three."

"Mercy!" she exclaimed. "Four children! In an apartment! No, they wouldn't take them at either place, I'm sure. Let me see, where can I send you." She ran down list after list.

She looked really worried. "You see, four is such a lot," she said. "Frequently there is no objection to one or two, but four—my, the other tenants would go crazy."

She searched the lists again.

"Wouldn't you like a house out in Newton?" she asked, brightening. "I can give you a splendid nine-room house there for $17.50 a month. It's a lovely house and a nice yard, and in a fine neighborhood. It would be an ideal place for children, too. A good many people out there have children."

"I'd rather stay in town if I could. However, hold the Newton house in mind," I suggested.

"Would you go way out Huntington avenue?" she asked, "say out in the 800s? I [illegible] find you an apartment there. I know of one $15 a month, fine one, too, good air and sunlight and all that I think you'd like."

"Isn't there anything nearer town?" I persisted.

She looked really desperate. I began to feel sorry for her. Finally she grabbed a card and scribbled on it some addresses.

"I'm not sure [illegible] of these," she said as she wrote, "[illegible] they will take the children [illegible].

"There's one on Blackwood street for $45, one on St. Botolph at $38, and another on St. Botolph that is $48. That is a beautiful apartment and just what you want if you can go [illegible]."

Makes Another Trial

"Then here is one on Winthrop road for $15, if you care to go that far out. I'm awfully sorry not to be able to find you just what you want," she added impulsively. "I have children, but there are people who don't, you know, and I think that most people who have four children usually go into the suburbs. It's really better for the children, you know."

I'd been a middle class woman, or some might call me poor, and looking for medium priced apartments. Perhaps if I paid more I would fare better.

Any way, I wasn't paying for the apartment, and my friend didn't know about it, so what care I though rents be high. I would try to locate the children in the b[illegible].

I started [illegible] and found [illegible] imposing building, which was quite irreproachable in appearance.

[illegible] baths. Rent $1,800 a year. It was unexpectedly vacated, and a most desirable apartment. The people who have occupied it [illegible] have gone abroad.

"Would you object to children?" I asked before I inspected it.

"Children?" [illegible] asked. "How many?"

"Four," I said meekly.

[illegible] "We [illegible] Winter for they were in peculiarly [illegible] cated [illegible] where they could not come in contact with the other tenants [illegible] that children would, I am afraid, annoy other people. You see, four children are a good many to take on."

No Objection to Dog

I saw a dog as I came in, I remarked. "Does he live here?"

"Very likely," was the reply. "A few of our tenants keep dogs. They [illegible]."

He showed me courteously to the door.

"I am sorry," he said, "but I think you will have to take a house if you wish to find a place for four children on the avenue."

"I'll not have my friend a pauper," I [illegible]. "I'll reduce her to poverty. I'll make her unable to pay over $20 a [illegible]

[illegible] to me that Councilman Foley had referred to people who could afford to pay $16, $17 or $18 and perhaps $20 a month for flats.

I went over to Tremont street.

At the first office I spied, which was not far from Berkeley street, I went in.

He wasted no words.

"Twenty dollars?" he said. "Nothin' [illegible] you pay $25?

"Well, the only thing I have is a flat on Melrose street, $14 a month.

"Bath? Yes, general, for the whole house.

"Children? They don't care."

At the next office I went down the stairs to the basement.

Very few of the real estate offices on Tremont street, and the [illegible], are in the basements of back houses.

He heard my story.

"I couldn't afford to pay over $20 a month, but I had four children. I wanted [illegible] neighborhood. I would like to be near some park where the children could play.

[illegible] Berkeley or Dartmouth [illegible] remembering that [illegible] Councilman Foley had spoken of those streets.

Relegated to the Suburbs.

"You can't get anything there less than $25 or $30 a month," he said. "No, I [illegible]

[illegible] Roxbury [illegible]

"Why don't you go out in the suburbs? You'd be better off. Too far from work? Well, lots of folks do it.

"If you want to stay right in town why don't you take a more expensive place and rent rooms?

"Have you got $100 in cash? I was going to say that if you had I could put you in the way of getting a lodging house where you could more than get your rent back. That's the way lots of folks do. You could keep the children upstairs so they wouldn't interfere with the lodgers and get on fine.

"Now, here's a flat, six rooms and bath, on Tremont street, for $25. Children? Lord, you can have all you want. They don't care. The woman that has had that flat has rented every room. But [illegible]. She got $14 a month out of it.

"You could rent them anyway, and that would give you three. That's all you'd need. The children are so little you could put three in one room and one with you. So you must rent four rooms."

I insisted that I did not want to rent rooms. I wanted to live alone.

"Well," he said, "I can't do anything for you around here for that price.

"Over the other side of Washington street you may be able to find what you want, but you will have hard work getting a bath, except the general one for the house, and there'll be no park near for the children.

"You know rents are high. The only ones I know [illegible] that will come near what you want are those houses owned by the [illegible] estate.

"They are on [illegible] St. [illegible] streets. They have [illegible] four rooms and bath, and they rent for $16 to $21 a month."

Doesn't Pay to Be Poor.

I decided that it didn't pay to be poor, so I'd try to be wealthy once more.

I was too weary to travel.

I returned to my home and called some of the biggest and best real estate agents in town.

My voice sounded tired even to myself.

"What have you in high-class apartments in the vicinity of Commonwealth avenue or Brookline, where they will take four children?" I asked.

[illegible] long I said "Hello" a couple of times to stir him up.

"Well," he said finally, "I was thinking. With four children, why don't you go to Brookline?

"We have [illegible] apartments on Commonwealth [illegible] eight or nine rooms, ranging from $1,200 to $2,000, where we [illegible] take children.

[illegible] "We have apartments of six rooms which are $800 or $900 a year, but they don't take children.

"Why not?" "Why, we can keep them filled by people without children."

"Dogs?" "Yes, we would take a small house dog."

"Good-by."

"There you are."

I've [illegible] town fairly well. I went home, climbed the stairs to my two [illegible] and bath. The dog and cat both came to the door to greet me.

I remembered having been distinctly annoyed by the noise of children playing in the court a few days before.

I spoke to the manager and he said humbly, "We only take them now and then."

I felt ashamed.

A child is a little grown up. Why make life hard for him and his parents. You were once a child. So was I. And a pretty pair we were, too.

Councilman Bill Foley is right.

The Second Coming of Christ

Weekly Sermon for Readers of the Boston Sunday American

By the Rev. Warren J. Hobbs, Pastor of the Advent Christian Church Roxbury.

"So likewise, ye when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors."—Matthew, xxiv., 33

THIS text is a part of a private discourse by our Lord on the Mount of Olives to His disciples explanatory of a public discourse in the Temple of the Jews. But prophetic of events from that time to the present is the second advent.

In giving this review of the faith and position of Adventists and present responsibility, the fundamental position is that taken by us as a denomination. On all questions touching vital godliness and experimental Christianity we believe in one God, a divine Christ, in real conversion by repentance and in faith and in holy living. Thus we are in perfect accord with all Evangelical churches.

We have, however, taken the position from this great prophecy of Christ and also from the prophetic Scripture throughout the Bible that we are warranted in proclaiming the personal, literal, second advent of Christ as near.

We have no faith whatever in any knowledge of the definite time of the second advent. We do not indorse that other idea that He may come to-morrow. He may not come in a million years. We believe that there are events still unfulfilled in prophecies that must occur before the second advent. How quickly they will transpire we do not profess to know.

We have not claimed any new view with regard to the application of the prophetic Scripture, but stand in full accord with all the great commentators for 300 years in their application, particularly to their interpretation of the prophecies in the main of the book of Daniel and St. John.

The great body of Evangelical commentators have taken the position that at the termination of these periods there will be a universal victory by the church militant and conversion of the world.

We, on the contrary, have taken the position that the termination of that period brings us to the second advent and that there is no victory promised to the church militant this side of the second coming of Jesus Christ.

It is also true that there is a growing unity and spiritual equipment among the intelligent and real pious Christians of all denominations and a spirit of unity. It is also sadly apparent that there is a great declension in the church as a whole and conformity to the world, which is a marked sign of the times in which we are living. In proof of which I give the following:

"Now the spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils."—I. Timothy [illegible]

Our Lord also informs us when we reach the epoch introduced by our text a condition of things will be manifest as quoted by him in the days of Noah.

"But as the days of Noah were so shall the coming of the son of man be, for as in the days before the flood, they were eating and drinking marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark."—Matthew, xxiv., 27

St. Paul also informs us in his last letter to the Thessalonians, that when our Lord comes to raise the dead and change the living, the world as a whole will be in perfect ignorance of the event, as [illegible] be crying peace and safety [illegible]. He [illegible] take the world by surprise.

The results during the fifty years of our denominational existence has brought to our standard such men as Moody, Varley, Whittle, Pierson, Bliss, Needham, the late A. J. Gordon and the very prominent evangelists of the world.

Dr. Torrey of the Moody school and the prominent evangelist lately in Europe is a conspicuous example at the present time.

Our responsibility! If the views that we make prominent are of divine appointment and now due the world, it is the most important message that Christ has ever given in the history of the church, and with these grand accessions within the last twenty-five years on our [illegible] admonish us that with renewed vigor we should proclaim to the world to the best of our ability this God-ordained message.

We believe that the logic of present conditions proves that we should not abandon the position that we have maintained on these lines in the last fifty years, nor abandon them and go back into older organizations.

We also assert with these wonderful accessions of this message is of divine importance that we now claim the men and money [illegible] believe these views should [illegible] methods and means combine for money and numbers to present this special truth to the world.

The luck of the baroness was told over the tea tables in the Lenox cottages, and the next day there was a run on the hardware stores for fishing tackle. Before the end of the day there was a famine in poles and outfittings. Caddies who had been making a dollar a day on the golf field deserted the golf field to dig fish worms, for which they received high prices. Boats around the lakes have been at premium since and are booked in advance. The catches have been good.

Lenox entertained more guests for the Fourth of July than ever before. Usually there has been but a few house parties and nothing more than a normal influx to the hotels, but this week saw throngs in each of the resort hotels and the cottagers generally entertaining large parties of friends. This made the Fourth a very brilliant and interesting day. There was a delightful breeze all day long that tempered the heat and made sailing one of the chief pleasures of the day. ### Ambassador and Family Will Take Leading Parts in Social Gayeties of the Season.

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., July 8.—The household of Baron de Rosen, new Ambassador of Russia to the United States and plenipotentiary to the peace conference to be held between his country and Japan in this country, is settled in the T. Jefferson Coolidge house, which the baron has leased for the Summer. With their entourage of secretaries and servants and much luggage they made their first appearance here on Thursday. Since that time they have been settling things and becoming accustomed to their surroundings.

The Coolidge house, although not extravagantly [illegible] is one of the best [illegible] at Manchester-by-the-Sea. Situated in the very heart of the circle of exclusiveness that is [illegible] here as even at Newport or Lenox, it has the advantage of surroundings that are the very atmosphere of aristocracy.

The selection of this place as the Summer [illegible] of the new Ambassador is regarded [illegible]

Baron de Rosen [illegible]

reading or otherwise using his eyes upon [illegible] He speaks English fluently, with but a slight accent, and his manner is either effusively cordial or coolly repellent, varying as he regards the person [illegible] his social equal or inferior. He is [illegible] smoker, seldom being seen away from his wife and daughter without either a cigar or cigarette in his mouth.

Baroness de Rosen is a woman of medium height, somewhat inclined to stoutness, with a well-preserved face and figure that can be described as "motherly" better than by any other word. She dresses in excellent taste and richly, but impresses the observer as being of sweet disposition and domestic habit. She is haughty only with those whom she would deem, by Russian standards, to be much her inferiors.

The daughter is a young girl with a sweet face and attractive manner. Her simplicity of dress thus far during her visit has been in marked contrast to the [illegible] American girls of a position in society equivalent to hers.

Baron de Rosen, after a day in Boston [illegible] went to Washington to formally report his presence in the country to the State Department. His plan is to return to Manchester at the earliest possible moment [illegible] resting quietly in anticipation [illegible] arduous labors of the peace conference.

In the month that is to intervene before the [illegible] can possibly get down to business [illegible]

[illegible] Rosen and his colleague Count [illegible]

Manchester is greatly interested in the [illegible] conference sessions [illegible] will be held here. Baron de Rosen would naturally be glad to have the [illegible] which will [illegible] made from Washington to some [illegible] place made [illegible] It is believed possible that the conference may take place [illegible] Baron de Rosen will not speak on the subject [illegible] on any official matter.

Casco Bay

Islands, Casco Bay, July 8.—The Summer festivities have [illegible] at Great Diamond Island [illegible] one of the [illegible] At Elwell Hall Miss Helen Thaxter and Mr. Roger Thaxter gave a dance in honor of their guests, Miss Weekly, Miss Wilcox and Miss [illegible] Academy, and Mr. Wallace, Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Legrow of Exeter Academy. About seventy-five of the younger set attended.

Mrs. Charles Flagg has been entertaining in honor of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Naury Flagg [illegible] who for years has been a Summer visitor at Great Diamond [illegible] Miss Flagg's paintings done [illegible] in Italy were exhibited [illegible] were served by Mrs. George [illegible] Owen, Miss Edith McAlpine, Miss [illegible] Miss Mildred Owen.

Mr. John [illegible] arrived for the season.

[illegible] cottage at [illegible] entertainment in her honor will be arranged at Elwell Hall.

Mrs. [illegible] and children of St. Albans, Vt., have taken a cottage at Little Diamond Island for the Summer.

Wednesday evening the Macao Association held its annual meeting, which was followed by a banquet.

A party of young men from Portland made up of Lawrence Smith, George Burgess, Parker [illegible] and Lawrence Parkman has pitched tents on the site so long occupied by Camp Lookout.

[illegible] and the island anticipates a prosperous season.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Conners, children and maid, of Somerville, Mass., are at the Beach Avenue Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Keith and family of Portland are occupying the Mariner cottage.

Marshfield

The Village Improvement Society met at the residence of Dr. [illegible] W. Stoddard at Marshfield Hills this week. It was the last meeting that will be held before the celebration of Old Home Week and on account of the work in connection with that event was attended by a large number of members. Committees were appointed to attend to the various details, and it is expected that the town will have a more elaborate celebration this year than has hitherto been attempted.

Mr. H. F. Bryant and wife are passing their vacation in Biddeford, Me.

The graduating class of the Marshfield High School has returned from a trip of several days through New Hampshire. The headquarters were at Moultonboro. Their teacher, Miss Susie Wadsworth of Malden, was the chaperon.

Rangeley Lakes

Rangeley, Me., July 8.—To the many fortunate enough to pass the hot days of July and August at these lakes, two thousand feet above the sea, they are ideal days.

One vast forest of spruce and pine covering the mountains that surround these lakes, gives to every breeze health to the weary body and overworked brain.

Hotels and camps all through the section are fast filling with guests, while from most of the private cottages and camps the flag is flying that announces "We are at home in the Maine wilderness."

[illegible] set of log cabins such as the millionaires are now building at the Rangeleys often [illegible] from fifty to a hundred thousand dollars, and it costs money to have everything the far away city market [illegible] forest home.

This is owned by Mr. Harry Dutton of the firm of Houghton & Dutton, and the family and servants arrived this week to [illegible]

At Black Point Camp on Mooselookmeguntic Lake [illegible] party of Bostonians are now enjoying life. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Parker and son Merrill, who have for guests Dr. and Mrs. J. Clark Jones and daughter, Miss Annie. Monday the young lady had quite an experience with a [illegible] pound salmon, which she skilfully landed, and also a three-pound trout.

Mrs. D. W. Farquhar and son Samuel of Newton were at their cottage on the Rangeley Lake last week.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Berry of Waltham, Mass., have closed their camp and gone home.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Porter of Lynn are at their camp on Dodge Pond for the July days.

The Rangeley Lake House, the big hotel of the region, is now quite gay, as the Summer people have begun to arrive. Prof. [illegible] orchestra came Monday, and there is now dancing at the Casino every evening. The golf links are a great attraction to lovers of the sport.

Among the late comers at this hotel who tarry for weeks are Mrs. Edward B. Crocker, a well-known Fitchburg society lady, and her niece, Miss Mildred G. Sears of Cambridge, and their friends, Mrs. Cyrus M. Van Slyde and daughter, Miss Margaret, of Providence.

Rev. Dr. Frederick Noble, who supplied the Jamaica Plain Congregational Church last Winter, and Mrs. Noble are at this hotel for the Summer.

Rev. Dr. [illegible] of Portland, formerly of Malden, with his wife and children, are also at this hotel for vacation days.

Monday Mr. Fred B. Gomee of Boston Symphony Orchestra joined his wife at their log cabin at Mountain View.

Another party of Bostonians who for the first season are in the Maine wilderness are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Pray and their charming daughters, Miss Helen C., Miss [illegible] and Miss Beatrice W. Pray.

H. W. Clarke, a merchant on Oliver street, who is eighty-four years of age, and has for forty Summers been fishing these waters and for twenty-nine seasons had David F. Haines for guide, can teach the younger anglers how to fish. Last Saturday he brought in a 4½-pound salmon, which was game for an hour, and Monday he caught another of 4½ pounds.

Portland

Portland, July 8.—Hermann Kotzschmar has received the degree of Doctor of Music from the New York Conservatory of Music. Mr. Kotzschmar is one of Portland's oldest musicians. Mrs. Kotzschmar and Miss Dorothea Kotzschmar are in Canada for a month's stay.

Those present at the thirty-third reunion of the class of '72, Portland High School, at the Seashore House, Old Orchard, were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward [illegible] and Miss Grace Marret.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kimball of Chicago, who have been guests at the Lafayette Hotel for the first of the week [illegible] Chicago. Mr. Kimball is the son of [illegible] Charles P. Kimball, a former carriage maker in Portland.

The wedding of Francis R. B[illegible] of Portland [illegible] take place this month.

Miss Kate [illegible] entertained a house party of young people from Providence at her Summer [illegible] at Mountain View [illegible] the Fourth.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman W. [illegible] of Brooklyn, N. Y., are passing several weeks with relatives in the [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] was Miss Hammond, daughter of the late William Hammond.

Among the Portland people in Miss Emily Keene [illegible] sketching party, which left early in the week for Quebec, are Miss [illegible] Verrill, Miss Mary Eastman, Shaw, Miss [illegible] Brown, Charles Baxter Cook, Miss [illegible] and Miss Ellis.

Invitations have been received from Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Pierce of London for the wedding of their daughter Dorothy to F. A. Vivian Morse at Kensington on Saturday, July 15. A reception will follow at the Royal Palace Hotel.

Important among the weddings of the week was that of William [illegible] Pinkham and Miss Ethel May Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Thompson of No. [illegible] Glenwood avenue. Relatives and a few friends were present. Rev. George P. Milward officiated. A reception followed. The young people will live at No. 45 [illegible] street and will be at home to friends after September 1.

Higgins Beach

Higgins Beach, Me., July 8.—The Pavilion was formally opened with a dancing party. Messrs. Charles Harford and Walter Stevens acted as floor directors.

Mrs. Howard Marston of Boston is spending a few weeks with her mother, Mrs. C. C. Voorhees.

Miss Helen Robinson and Mr. J. V. Chase of Boston have been guests of Mrs. T. B. Payne.

Mrs. Warren Davidson of Boston has recently been staying at Uneeda Rest, Me.

Manchester

Manchester-by-the-Sea, July 8.—It would be hard [illegible] of the scores of magnificent [illegible] North Shore by a written description [illegible] who saw the display of [illegible] sweet-scented [illegible] flowers at the Manchester Town Hall [illegible]

[illegible]

The week has been a particularly gay one on the North Shore. There have been many [illegible]

[illegible] pretty displays were [illegible]

At their charming Summer home, Pine Top, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey [illegible] have been entertaining Miss Louise Thatcher of New York, who left Thursday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Bigelow entertained a delightfully merry party of young people at their Manchester Cove house Monday evening, covers being set for twelve at dinner. The affair was rather in the form of a family party in honor of Mr. Bigelow's [illegible] birthday.

Misses Mattie and Mary Wetherbee of Boston have been guests of Miss Mabel [illegible] at Smith's Point the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Knowles were down the shore the early part of the week visiting Mrs. Knowles's family, the John R. [illegible] at their Summer place on Smith's Point.

John Reece and Franklin Fay, two of the young men of the Summer colony at Manchester, started the early part of the week for Westfield, where Mr. Fay is encamped with Company A, First Corps of Cadets, and Mr. Reece with Battery A.

In his handsome new yacht the Prosit, John R. Schoeffel brought a merry party down the North Shore from Boston Tuesday for a day's outing. They came to Manchester and lunched at Mr. Schoeffel's [illegible] the Masconomo. In the party were Mrs. Schoeffel, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Worcester, Thomas J. Barry, A. S. Hanson and John Nickerson.

White Mountains

[illegible]

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] of Roxbury are making an extensive carriage tour of the mountains.

Dr. and Mrs. [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Sprague of [illegible] and Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] of Boston are [illegible]

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley [illegible] Monk, whose marriage last week was a society event of Watertown, are spending their honeymoon at [illegible]

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Harding of Dedham with [illegible] and Miss Gretchen Howes [illegible] spent Sunday at the Kearsarge House at North Conway.

At the [illegible] House at North Conway are Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] of Boston and Mr. and Mrs. George R. Dana and son of Lowell.

Granville Tyler of Boston has opened his Summer home at North Conway for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. David P. Kimball of Boston and Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Draper and family of Hopedale are opening their cottages at the Profile House, Franconia Notch, this week. John Kendrick Bangs and family will spend a portion of the season there also. They have let their cottage this year for the season to New York parties.

Old Orchard

Old Orchard Beach, Me., July 8.—Whiffs of invigorating sea breezes, pungent perfume from the neighboring pine forests and the mingled sweetness of wild rose blossoms, clover blooms and new mown hay are some of the inducements offered at this famous seaside community and enjoyed by thousands of beach sojourners these glorious July days.

The Fourth rush was large, as usual, and in many instances the trains on the Boston & Maine were run in two and three sections, and it seemed that nearly all the people got off here. "I entertained more vacationists in June than any years since I have been in the hotel business," remarked a veteran boniface Tuesday evening. [illegible] more people here at hotels and cottages than ever before in the history of the place, and hotel and boarding house keepers [illegible] thus early.

The hotels are now all open, the Velvet on the sea wall being the last to open its doors. The hotel this year is under the management of Mr. J. C. Ryder of Boston, who has had twenty years' experience in hotels and clubhouses throughout New England. This hotel, which opened Saturday, is filling up with guests from all parts of the Union.

While handsome Summer girls are as numerous as white weed in a hayfield, young men are conspicuous by their absence in the dance halls, some of the most fascinating maidens being often compelled to waltz alone. Mid-July, however, brings lots of men here, and then the charming women who dance like fairies will have no cause to complain.

Rev. Silliman Blagden, the writer and apostle of Christian Unity of Boston, is at the Sea Shore House for the balance of the season.

Miss Laura Allen of Alfred is stopping with her father, Congressman Allen, at his Summer home on Cedar avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith of Brookline, Mass., who have been prominent Summer visitors for several years, are domiciled at their beautiful villa, "The Breakers," [illegible] avenue.

Rev. W. H. H. McAllister and family have arrived from Methuen, Mass., where they will pass the Summer.

Among the cottagers to arrive this week are: Mrs. [illegible] Lawrence; Mrs. C. W. Startwell and family, Cambridge; C. W. Dennet and family, North Adams; Miss S. H. Brown of Portland; Emil Wolstand and family of Brockton; Miss Gertrude A. Hall of Manchester, N. H.; Mrs. Sarah E. Kelnston of Cambridge.

Among those occupying cottages at Camp Ellis are: W. J. Town and family of West Medford, Fred J. Pillsbury and family of Somerville, D. R. Putnam and family, Sunapee Lake, N. H.; Elbridge Milliken and family, Boston; Dr. J. E. Littlefield and family, Saco.

The following party of handsome graduates from Bates College in the class of '04 have been stopping at the Sea Shore House this week: Misses E. M. Reynolds, Mabel Morrison, Edith North, Annie Wheeler, Alton Walker, Bessie Cooper, Edna Gentle, Luela Greene and Edith Thompson.

One of the handsomest turnouts seen at this resort is owned by Charles Locke of [illegible] who, with his family, is stopping at Hotel Velvet for the balance of the season. Mr. Locke was a visitor here last year, and was so delighted with the place that he decided to come again this year.

Automobiling on the beach is one of the chief pleasures here. The beach is as hard as a floor at low tide and offers a magnificent opportunity for owners of touring cars to try out their machines.

Among the arrivals at Hotel Velvet the past week are Mr. and Mrs. James Brett, Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Little, Mr. and Mrs. A. Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. V. L. Lord, Frank Stokes, J. M. O'Brien, Charles McNeil, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Lewis, Miss Lizzie E. Doherty, W. O. Jakes, Mrs. A. M. Maynard, Mr. and Mrs. Cleft F. Medford, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Metiery, Alice L. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Foster, H. A. Brown, H. F. Frost, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Sullivan, Mrs. Crafts, Miss Holland, Miss Mae G. Parks, Boston; Miss Mae Goodwin, Stoneham; Mrs. F. H. Felton, Lowell; Jennie Bartlett, Dorchester; Mary Kelley, Charlestown; Lon Pennington, Worcester; Miss Blanche L. Crafts, Milton; E. R. Lake, Brockton; J. E. Sullivan, Springfield; G. Patterson, George M. Cohen, Manchester, N. H.; Beatrice Fay, Mary Dunn, Margaret Dunn, Marlboro; J. F. Mercier, Methuen; J. Sime Mercer, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Tart, Lawrence; Mrs. J. C. Downs, Miss Stephenson, H. W. Burr, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Moses, W. S. Overton, Portland; A. P. Cram, E. E. M. Bulowa, Dr. F. E. M. Bullowa, J. Parker [illegible] Miss Savan, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. [illegible] Burke, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. [illegible] Edward F. [illegible] Charles J. [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Birde, New York; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Quinn and sons, [illegible] Mr. [illegible] A. Price, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. [illegible] R. Lake, Brooklyn; Thomas R. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] A. Strout, Toledo.

Old Orchard House—Mrs. W. A. Babcock, Miss [illegible] Bowen, J. O'Connor, [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Worcester; Charles Rauschenberger [illegible] Washington; Miss [illegible] Charles Cohn, J. M. Friend, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Ham, L. L. Wilkeson, Mr. and Mrs. Ivanspiro, Mr. and Mrs. Rose B. Spiro, A. Sternberger, Philip Bachrach, [illegible] Harris, Mandel Frankel, Harry S. [illegible] David B. Baum, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Cohn, A. Cohn, Mrs. L. Monheimer, New York; Miss Watson, Miss Mahoney, [illegible] Erie; Mrs. E. Klein, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Friend, three children, two maids, New Orleans; George A. Lovely, Springfield, Mass.; F. [illegible] Portland.

Sea Shore House—M. D. Williams, [illegible] Philip O'Brien, Joseph J. Corbett [illegible] Gunnes, J. T. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Rosenward, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Wales, [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Milliken, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Henderson, W. H. Walsh, George A. [illegible] H. B. Hume, J. [illegible] F. W. Nash, J. A. [illegible] J. P. Harding, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Henderson, Mrs. C. L. Anderson, Miss Anderson, Brookline; Mrs. J. Broadhead, Methuen; Mrs. A. M. Scott, Lawrence; Harvey Dunbar, Brockton; J. J. Wade, Portland; Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Halpin, Lowell; Joseph J. Finson, [illegible] Newton; Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Branford [illegible] Miss Grace [illegible] J. S. Power, New York; H. H. Lyon, Chicago; J. J. Windsor, Chicago.

Cape Elizabeth

Cape Elizabeth, Me., July 8.—The wedding of Miss Florence McMullan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. McMullan, and Lieutenant John Wiley Gulick, United States Artillery Corps, stationed at Fortress Monroe, which was celebrated at the family Summer place at Glen Cove, Monday afternoon, was the most brilliant event of the Summer. Bishop Codman of Maine performed the ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attended by Miss Helen Rowe. Lieutenant W. L. Brown of Fortress Monroe was best man and the ushers were Thomas L. Pierce and Howard R. Ives of Portland, L. L. Ayers of Philadelphia, Captain Douglas F. Duval, Captain J. B. Mitchell and Lieutenant John J. Loring.

The Misses Katherine Hale, Violetta Brown, Hilda Libby, Marguerite Rumery, Madaleine Baxter of Portland, Mrs. Thomas Luce of Portsmouth, Mrs. Walter Winthrop Fogg of Newton, Mrs. Grant Shartle of Baltimore, Mrs. L. L. Ayers of Philadelphia, Miss [illegible] of Adams, Harold Berry, Dr. Luce, Howard Ives, Stanley Fogg, Mrs. Delafield and Guy Delafield of Boston, were present.

Mr. Dalton of the Cliff House gave a Fourth of July celebration for his guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Graffam and family of Malden, Mass., have opened their cottage here.

Newport

Newport, R. I., July 8.—Never was there Fourth of July which was so gay as that last Tuesday in the cottage colony. By actual count there were thirty-eight dinners, twelve of which were given with fireworks displays and six with music and vaudeville. Seventeen of the dinners were given on verandas, which seems to be the fad this Summer.

The Clambake Club held its first [illegible] during the afternoon and was a sort of farewell to James J. Van Alen, who has left for New York en route to his English home.

This evening Mrs. [illegible] H. Baldwin is giving a large dinner for the young people in honor of her grandchild, Miss Des[illegible], daughter of Mrs. Edward Parker Des[illegible], on the handsome enclosed veranda with hundreds of tiny electric lights and trailing vines with tall palms. The company included the Misses Cynthia Roche, Nelca Rives, Nannie Gilbert, Charlotte Warren, Edna Barger, Anita Sands, Miss [illegible], Mr. and Mrs. Austen Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, the Messrs. Albert and John Clinton Gray, Jr., Charles M. Oelrichs, Jr., Harry Oelrichs and others.

Mrs. Baldwin will give a dance later for her grandchild, who resembles her mother strongly and therefore is a beauty of the Spanish type. She will be shown a deal of attention by the cottagers. She rides and drives beautifully and her dancing is perfect.

Mr. and Mrs. Austen Gray of New York are occupying a handsome suite at the Muenchinger King cottage for the season and having a happy time with their young friends, who are giving dinners and luncheons in their honor.

Last season the cottage colony were worked up to fever heat over the report that the young people had eloped and had married. Mrs. Gray was the beautiful Miss [illegible]enham of Boston and had been a guest at the "Reggie" Vanderbilt farm a few days before the news of the elopement and marriage set the cottage colony on fire."

Mrs. Gray will entertain a number of her Boston friends during the season, including Miss Eleonora Sears, who is coming down for the tennis tournament at the Casino the last of the month.

Mrs. J. DeForest Danielson of Boston has easily won the title of being the most expert lady automobilist in Newport this season.

The Clambake Club is sure to be the most popular place in the colony of cottagers again this season. Already there are no less than eighteen engagements for the place already booked, two of which will be large moonlight affairs with a dance for which old fashioned fiddlers are being secured. A [illegible] affair is one of the events and efforts are being made by the bachelors to give a dance there.

There is a report which is generally credited that a [illegible] ball will be one of the features during August. It may be a fancy dress affair, as there has been no such entertainment held here in years.

Mrs. Lawrence Waterbury is here again and that means a great deal for the fun at Newport. Mrs. Waterbury is never happier than when making others happy. The Waterburys can think up more original plans for entertainments than any twelve other members of the Newport cottagers. It was the Waterburys who originated the dinner dance at [illegible] Beach on a beautiful moonlight night last season and illuminated the place with hundreds of [illegible] that called the fire department officials to the place, believing there was fire in progress.

The Baroness de Tuyll, wife of Baron de Tuyll of the French Embassy, is still the uncrowned queen of beauty in the cottage set and the most gorgeous dresser and the most sought after woman for the larger dinner parties here this season. She is a delightful singer, drives and rides her black charger on the country roads every morning for an hour before breakfast in a manner which causes the milkmen to turn and look at the handsomest woman in Newport.

Vicomte de Chambrun, Monsieur des Portes and Comte de Peretti of the French Embassy have arrived at the Berkeley for the season. Thus the French government is well represented at Newport this Summer.

The Newport Golf Club, after a checkered career, has again opened the club house and the course for the season. There is no longer the exclusiveness which caused a financial collapse and killed golf here for two seasons. The late Theodore A. Havemeyer, the sugar king, organized the club and while he lived was its president and when there was a deficit it was he who made it up from his own pockets.

The officers of the club for this year are: President, George L. Rives; Secretary and Treasurer, Robert J. Gammell; House Committee, [illegible] Stewart, Victor Sorchan and William Gammell.

Electricians and gardeners are completing on the rear lawn of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish what will be one of the most original effects in the cottage colony of Newport.

On either side of the driveway entrance are six white pillars of iron about eight feet in height and painted in white to match the massive white pillars in front of the villa. Woven about these pillars will be vines of ivy and growing and trailing flowers with hundreds of small colored electric [illegible]. Coming from Paris are a dozen white marble statues representing music, literature, [illegible], the sculptor and the [illegible], which are claimed to be among the finest in Paris and which were purchased by an agent whom Mrs. Fish sent abroad for the purpose.

Beverly Farms

Beverly Farms, July 8.—The society whirl on this section of the North Shore, and through Pride's Crossing and along the Beverly shore is getting at its height. As there are no hotels in this part of the shore social activities depend wholly on cottage life. Practically every house has now been occupied and until the middle of September the season will be at its best.

Among the more recent arrivals are the [illegible] and the Westons of Boston and the [illegible] Chapmans of Chicago, who have occupied the Little cottage on Hale street.

Mrs. Edgar Bliss, who has been passing the early season here with her daughter, Mrs. Otis [illegible], sailed from Boston Thursday for Liverpool, whence she will go to the continent. She will not return till the Fall.

The [illegible] gave a party at their Beverly Cove villa on Monday and Tuesday evenings. Mrs. Henry Pratt McKean gave a party Monday night at her charming Pride's Crossing villa for twenty guests and Mrs. F. L. Higginson gave a dinner Tuesday for fifteen.

After a visit with the Misses Anne S. Lit[illegible] of Philadelphia, Sir William Mather of Manchester, England, after the celebration of Independence Day, left here Wednesday morning, and after a brief stay in Boston will go to Newport for a short visit before returning to England.

Francis Bartlett has been away from his Pride's Crossing place the past week visiting relatives in [illegible], Me.

Among the new visitors at the Beverly shore this year are the James Higginsons of New York, who intended to take the Blake cottage in Manchester the first of the season. They have occupied the Longworth villa at Pride's Crossing this week. The Higginsons will no doubt be prominently connected with all the affairs of the colony this Summer. Mr. Higginson is a brother of Frances L. Higginson of Pride's Crossing and of Major Henry Lee Higginson, who has a beautiful place at Manchester.

The most distinguished guest on the North Shore this week, no doubt, is M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, and Mme. Jusserand, who are passing a few days with Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Loring at the charming villa in Pride's Crossing.

Cottage City

Cottage City, July 8.—The chief Fourth of July celebration hereabouts was over at Vineyard Haven, where horse races, baseball and other sports were offered for entertainment in the daytime, and a good fireworks program in the evening. The New Bedford High School cadets, who have been in camp there, gave a drill in the forenoon.

George B. Wood of New York has the record bluefish to his credit. One of the fish he caught last Monday weighed eighteen and one-half pounds.

Mrs. S. B. Hopkins of Boston has opened [illegible] for the season.

Dr. E. H. Raymond and family of Summit, N. J., have arrived at Edgartown, and will Summer there as usual.

Mr. Alvah H. Peters of Boston has opened his Summer residence on Canton avenue and makes weekly trips here.

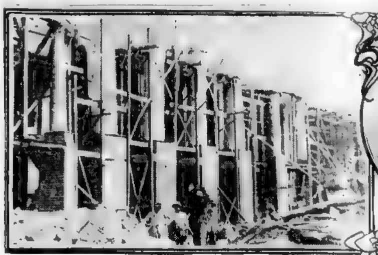
NEW FRICK MANSION ON THE NORTH SHORE IS ASSUMING MAGNIFICENT PROPORTIONS



A View of New Mansion.

HENRY C. FRICK

It Will Set a New Mark for Other Millionaires to Follow in Building.

Society Is Awaiting Advent of New Additions to the Summer Colony.

The new half-million dollar Summer residence which is being built on Hale street, Pride's Crossing, for Henry C. Frick of Pittsburg, the "Steel King," is now assuming such definite outline that an idea can be obtained of the magnificence and splendor which will mark the structure when completed. Filled as is the North Shore with costly houses, this splendid gray stone mansion which Mr. Frick is building for a Summer home promises to set a new mark in expenditure and luxury.

North Shore society is impatient for the place to be finished. The wealthy cottagers anticipate that hospitality in keeping with such an establishment will be inaugurated by the Fricks, adding greatly to the social life of the Summer colony.

Work was begun on the house last October and expert artisans are hurrying its construction as fast as is possible on such an elaborate undertaking. The building will be of gray stone with steel frame and fireproof construction. The inside finish will be luxurious in the extreme.

Hampton Beach

Hampton Beach, N. H., July 8.—An effort is being made to suppress some of the Sunday attractions at the beach. Last week the clergymen petitioned the Selectmen to close the skating rink and the bowling alleys at the Casino. An order was issued to close them, but the management refused to obey the order. The Casino is under the management of the street railroad, and they propose to fight the matter, so that there is at present a full grown controversy on between the town and the railroad.

W. H. Cater of Salem has opened his cottage at the beach for the Summer.

Irving Powers of Boston is enjoying town life at a farm at Hampton, which he has taken for the Summer.

H.; Miss Southerland of Salem, Mr. and Mrs. John Hyslop of Abington, Mr. J. Allen Boone of Newport, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Milliken of Allston, Miss Ethel Dilwiles of Mansfield, O.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clapp of Brookline, Professor Felix Adler, Mrs. Adler, Miss Margaret and Mr. Lawrence Adler of New York.

Biddeford Pool

Biddeford Pool, Me., July 8.—One of the finest samples made by nature, when she started to fashion vacation places for weary city folk, was Biddeford Pool, at the mouth of the beautiful winding river Saco, and on the shores of the broad Atlantic, where cool breezes blow throughout the Summer time. It is an ideal place to pass the Summer, away from the crowds of fashionable watering places, where few excursionists invade, and yet having all the inducements in the way of fishing, boating and other Summer pastimes.

The peninsular resort has long been inhabited during the heated period by wealthy people from St. Louis, Cincinnati, New York and other places. They have built elegant Summer villas here, where they come for rest. Thousands of dollars have been expended in beautifying the grounds surrounding the Summer residences. The resort offers picturesque drives branching off in every direction, fine bathing and magnificent ocean views.

The season of 1905 is now on in full swing, and bids fair to be the most prosperous in the history of the community. The hotels, which were closed last season, have been opened and are entertaining quite a number of guests. The tide of incoming visitors is steadily increasing and by the middle of July every cottage will be sheltering its quota of guests, and the hotels will be well filled.

Somerville

Professor Harry G. Chase and family are at their Summer home in West Newbury.

Mrs. Charles P. Walker of Chicago, formerly of this city, is visiting her sister, Mrs. W. J. Mathers of Burnside avenue.

Mrs. Emily M. Carr and Miss Martina A. Norris have gone on a five weeks' tour to Yellowstone Park, Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Holmes and their two sons, Fred and Frank, started Thursday on the Republic for a visit to Mr. Holmes' old home in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Moore and Miss Ethel Moore of Madison street are at Lake Monponsett, South Hanson, for the month of July.

Mrs. Hattie D. Raymond of No. 153 Lowell street and Miss Hunt of Summer street are at Lake Sunapee, N. H., for two weeks.

Mrs. Stephen D. Morton is at Rockport for a few weeks.

Marblehead

Marblehead, July 8.—The New York Yacht Club fleet is expected to arrive here August 17, and the Summer colony and permanent residents are to join hands in arranging a fitting reception.

General Hoyt Wheeler and family of Nashua, N. H., arrived this week and are occupying their handsome cottage at the Neck. Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Atkins and Mrs. R. T. Atkins of Lowell, regular Summer residents, were also among the arrivals this week.

Miss Jane Cooley entertained the Universalists Woman's Club at her residence on Prospect street Wednesday evening. A musical program was given and a short talk proved of great interest to the members.

The first band concert of the season at the Eastern Yacht Club at the Neck was held Thursday night. Concerts are to be given Monday nights at the Corinthian Yacht Club.

Miss Alice Preble of Melrose is the guest this week of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. Preble.

The Fourth of July concert given the guests at the Rockmere was admirably conducted by Mrs. G. E. Brackett. Miss Fannie M. Collister of Salem sang several solos.

Hops are arranged for this coming week at all the hotels and the number of guests will be materially increased both at the Neck and in the town proper.

At the Snow House are Mrs. Charles C. Harrington and Robert W. Harrington, Newton; Albert M. Harlow, Cambridge; Mrs. Frank A. Gardiner and son, J. A. Gardiner, New York; Miss Jane Vanderbilt, New York; Mrs. C. B. Campbell and Miss Josephine F. Campbell of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. John S. Gerest, Melrose; Mrs. Daniel Drummond and Miss Margueretta Drummond of Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Tarbell, Worcester; Mrs. Herbert C. Wood, Fort Plains, N. Y.; Miss Alice D. Wood, Cambridge; M. Hollander, New York city; J. Hollander, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Squier, Jr., Miss Bertrand Squier, Maplewood, N. J.; Stanton Whitney, New York; C. H. Whitney, Milton; Geoffrey G. Whitney, Milton; Horace C. Harrington, Newton; Donald P. O'Brien, Maplewood, N. J.; Miss Austina B. Raymond, Lowell; Miss Alice Molineaux, Boston; Milton B. Ripley, Boston; Miss Etta Gallison, Boston; Miss Gertrude Edmund, Lowell; Miss N. Humphrey, New York.

Late arrivals at the Rockmere Hotel are J. A. Davis, Boston; John Reed, Boston; J. W. Lee, New York; Mrs. W. G. Lovejoy, Miss Ethel W. Lovejoy, Boston; Mrs. William E. Page and Miss Elsie and Miss Kathleen Page, Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur T. Kidder, Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Poffer, H. Leslie Poffer, Stanley B. Poffer, Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Leonard, Boston; M. W. Foslern and Miss Bertha Foslern, Boston; Miss Mabel F. Houghton, Brookline; Mrs. I. A. Evans, Miss Edith Evans, Brookline; C. F. Aldrich, Boston; J. H. [illegible], [illegible]; Harold [illegible], Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Cooper, Miss Clara A. Cooper and Miss Netti A. Cooper, Boston; Willard Welsh, Boston; Miss Blanche E. Barney, Boston; Miss Helen A. Treadwell, Brookline; Miss Ethel Mae Mead, Brookline.

Revere Beach

The regular Summer visitors at Revere Beach are arriving in large numbers. The cottages along the State boulevard and those to be secured about the town have all been engaged, and the occupants are enjoying the many delightful recreations which this resort furnishes.

Thousands after thousands promenade the spacious sidewalks and patronize the many amusement resorts and booths which line the seashore, and among the pleasure seekers, more than ever before, are prominent society people from all parts of the country.

Each pleasant day the shore is covered with family groups and picnic parties, and scattered along in the surf are to be seen hundreds of bathers, who either occupy houses and cottages within the boundaries of the town or are registered at one of the hotels, while the mysteries of the amusement resorts create laughter.

Among the recent hotel arrivals are: At the Metropolitan Hotel—Mr. Samuel Thompson and Dan Crowther, New Bedford; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dustin, Lowell; Mr. and Mrs. H. Lewis, Boston; Mr. Albert Elliott, Mr. Claude Marden, Miss Belle Conant and Miss Susie King, Orange; Mr. and Mrs. Melbourne, South Framingham; Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Smith, Mansfield; Mr. James F. Patten, Natick; Mr. A. R. MacLeod, Concord; Mrs. Alfred D. Ware, Mrs. James A. Murphy and Mr. Edwin Murphy, Lowell; Mr. Henry Jacobs, Mr. J. J. Carroll, wife and daughter.

At the Pleasanton—Mr. John C. Lanz, Mercer, Ct.; Mr. Oscar Monroe and family, Fitchburg; Mr. and Mrs. John B. Wilson, Manchester, N. H.; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gilman and Miss Clara Gilman, Laconia, N. H.; Mr. Ralph Gilman, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. W. Joyce, New York; Mr. H. H. Witherell, Monmouth, Me.; Mr. Joseph Wilcox and family, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Wilcox, Athol; Mrs. James T. Shanahan, Haverhill; Mr. E. A. McDonald, Chelsea; Mr. George C. Flye, Charlestown; Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Bailey, New York; Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Taylor, Providence, R. I.

Nantasket

Nantasket, July 8.—The Nantasket Protective Association is determined that the restrictions placed upon the erection of a certain class of buildings shall be adhered to. The members object to the new bath house near Surfside and to certain other buildings. They threaten to bring suit against the owners of the properties unless they are changed so as to come within the agreement entered into several years ago.

A riding club has been organized and will have meets each Saturday. Mr. Henry M. Whitney has tendered the free use of his track in Cohasset, and the members anticipate much sport this season. Bradford C. Wilder has been elected president and D. W. Gilbert secretary and treasurer. The racing and speedway committee consists of Alfred Clapp, George H. Hatchard, Charles E. McKenzie, John H. Mitchell, Charles E. West. The directors are A. A. Davenport, A. E. Bates and J. C. Rudderham.

Among the arrivals, most of whom are staying for the season, at the Atlantic House are Mr. J. B. Smith and family of New York, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crouch of St. Louis, Mr. Shade Murray and Mr. Byrd Murray of Nashville, Tenn., Mr. M. D. Arnold and wife and Mr. I. F. Dooley and wife of Knoxville, Tenn., Thomas B. Phillips, wife and daughter, of Milwaukee, P. R. Marshall and wife of Boston and Mr. H. B. Knight of Boston.

South Weymouth

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Derby have gone to Natick, where they will stay for a few weeks with their son, Prescott Derby.

What the July Days Bring for Society Folk In Boston —and— the Suburbs

Advent of the Hot Weather Sees Rush Away From the City On in Full Force. Pleasure-Loving People Are Enjoying a Rest Far Away From the City's Turmoil.

SOCIALLY the Summer calm of things has settled over Boston. With the exception of occasional birds of passage, there is nothing to direct attention from the social interest centring strongly on the North Shore, where the steady arrival of distinguished members of diplomatic circles is adding zest to the gay whirl of life into which the elect are now fairly plunged.

With the arrival at Manchester-by-the-Sea of Ricardo Boghette of the Italian Legation and Baron de Rosen, the Russian Ambassador, his family and Prince Kondatheff, and Magnolia virtually named as the favored spot where the Russian-Japanese peace conference is to be held, all indications are for a season supreme in the social history of the North Shore.

If June wept and was cool and unkind, July has been ushered in smiling and radiant with the prophecy of days full of warmth and sunshine and a perfection that excuses the exclamation

Not to be doing, but to be."

Life in the "great out-of-doors" becomes more the fashion each season, and cottage and villa are serving only as a shelter during sleep. Society is leading the way back to that half-savage simplicity which we are told is the secret to the charmed life.

A pleasing and pretty innovation in Summer hospitalities which Boston hostesses are adopting is the "garden tea" inaugurated at Lenox by Miss Josephine Durand, daughter of the British ambassador.

Miss Durand gave one of the outdoor afternoon teas last week at Deepdene, the home of the Summer embassy, and now this form of entertainment is all the rage. Among those who attended the initial garden tea at Deepdene were the Choates, who drove over from Stockbridge, as did the Frothinghams with Miss Heloise Meyer, sister of Ambassador Meyer, and there were others of the Boston colony present.

Those who were privileged to meet Baron de Rosen, his wife and daughter during their brief stay in Boston the past week speak with enthusiasm of their charm and democratic good sense. Miss de Rosen is pretty and just fourteen, dresses simply, wearing her hair down her back, looking much like a typical Boston school girl. She loves outdoor life and was most eager and curious to see the Summer home at Manchester, where she hopes for a foretaste of society life.

The baroness is fresh, portly and pretty and devoted to her daughter. She is a woman of wide culture and many talents with a love for the sane and substantial things of life. It was to her on the eve of her husband's departure from Tokio at the outbreak of the war that the Empress of Japan paid the compliment and honor of a visit, during which Her Majesty expressed her high opinion of the Russians, and a hope that the war would soon end and be followed by a closer union of the two nations.

Prince Kondatheff, a guest in the baron's household, is said to be amused at all things American, and especially American girls.

The De Rosens are charmed with the Summer quarters of the embassy, the location overlooking the million-dollar mansion of T. Jefferson Coolidge. With a large retinue of French and Russian servants, they are equipped to entertain on a lavish scale, and all society is wondering whether or not they will do so, or whether they, too, will take to the fad for a simple life.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and many socially and otherwise distinguished women of Boston are interested in the Woman's Peace Circle, which was founded in New York by Helen Schramm and incorporated there Wednesday, and to which Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt was elected honorary president. The aim of the society is to devote its efforts and influence to the cause of peace by every means of arbitration, because the settlement of all national and international disputes by war is absolutely contrary to the principles of civilization at the present age; and women, because of what they are called upon to sacrifice and endure in time of war, are peculiarly endowed to awaken in the hearts of the people the true enthusiasm and ardor necessary to make active and sympathetic the measures to be adopted against the terrible barbarities of war.

Mrs. Ella Hastings is president of the circle. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt is one of the directors.

Major-General Leonard Wood, Mrs. Wood and Holstead Dorsey, U. S. A., who were among the distinguished visitors in Boston for a few days during the past week, enjoyed on their way here a chance visit with Miss Alice Roosevelt, with whose father General Wood has been on intimate terms for many years, and whose guest he will be at Oyster Bay before he returns to Manila, after an extended visit to his mother at the old home on the Cape.

Being a graduate of the Harvard Medical School in 1884, the General has many intimate personal friends in Boston, especially among the medical profession. But at the Touraine, where he stayed while here, he was obliged to deny himself to all callers as he was here solely for the purpose of having his eyes attended to, as they have been rather seriously affected by the tropical glare and too much work.

Among the midsummer bridals which society is anticipating is that of Miss Elizabeth Andrew, the demure and dainty little Vincent clubite, who will marry Charles E. Mason of Commonwealth avenue on Saturday, July 15.

Miss Andrew has elected to have a rural wedding, and the nuptial knot will be tied in Hingham, followed by a large reception at the Andrew residence, the old Governor Andrew homestead. A large number of invitations have been issued by Miss Edith Andrew of Fairfield street, who has been a mother to the prospective bride and her sister, Mrs. Dudley Clark, ever since Mrs. Andrew's death, when they were children.

The neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Head are regretting their departure with their two daughters, Miss Mary Head and Miss Margaret Head, from their beautiful country place at Manchester-by-the-Sea. The Heads are to pass the remainder of July and August at their country home at Westport, Lake Champlain. The Head estate at Manchester has been leased to Mr. Otto H. Kahn of New York, who is a lover of fine horses, and who possesses some of the most valuable steeds in this country.

Mr. Mason, who was graduated this year and was one of the most popular hosts at the Beck tea, is the fourth son of Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer B. Mason, and is abundantly blessed with this world's goods, while his bride-to-be, who was presented the past Winter, was the richest bud of the season.

Prominent among those who plan to attend this wedding are Mr. J. Hampden Robb and his daughter, Miss Cornelia Robb, who after a month in Paris and another in London have just returned to their Southampton estate, The Dolphins, where they entertained royally the past week. Miss Andrew is Mr. Robb's favorite niece.

Mrs. John L. Gardiner, who is spending a very quiet Summer at her picturesque Brookline residence and varying it with brief occasional visits to intimate friends, plans soon to be among the guests of that most delightful of Newport hostesses, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish.

Among the interesting personages who were at the Touraine the past week was Mrs. Harry C. New of Indianapolis, wife of the vice-chairman of the Republican National Committee, who was on her way to Nantucket. Mrs. New knows more, perhaps, of the ins and outs of national politics than any woman in America.

Sir Edgar Elgar and Lady Elgar were among guests at the Touraine the past week and saw Boston for the first time under the guidance of their host, Professor Samuel S. Sanford of Yale. Sir Elgar is the famous British composer, who recently received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from Yale. Sir and Lady Elgar left Boston for New Haven and will sail for England on the 11th.

The letters of Professor Charles Eliot Norton, vice-president of the Hospital Aid Society of the Holy Ghost Hospital for Incurables of Cambridge, asking for subscriptions to the fund of the aid society, have met with great success in accomplishing the purpose for which they were intended.

Arrangements have been nearly completed for the annual lawn party of the aid society, which is to be held July 15. It is expected that this will add a considerable amount to the fund of the society. As usual, the party will be held on the grounds of the Holy Ghost Hospital, and as usual society is planning liberal patronage of this pet charity in the University city.

The Richard H. Danas are fairly settled in their beautiful villa on Dana's Beach, Manchester-by-the-Sea, so named for Mr. Richard H. Dana, who bought all the land on the shore in that vicinity a long time ago, before it had become known to the world of fashion.

[illegible] of this condition is the war between Russia and Japan, for the supremacy of the yellow race has come as a revelation to the bazars. That an Asiatic race can defy and even conquer a European one has made the natives [illegible]. The spirit of dissatisfaction and [illegible] in the air now is far more acute than it was two years before the Mutiny.

What makes the situation more dangerous is the ability of the babus [illegible] spread their tidings of revolt to every end of the Indian empire with [illegible] ease. The problem of how news travelled from the utmost ends of India in the days of the Mutiny has [illegible] solved. But since then [illegible] Indian native opinion and [illegible] can make themselves easily heard [illegible].

Lord Kitchener's statement that the Indian Army is practically worthless has been widely circulated among the [illegible]. Lord Curzon's tyrannical methods have set every [illegible] against him personally and the personality of a ruler has an effect [illegible] India [illegible]. The [illegible] possibilities of the situation have been brought directly to the attention of the King and it is known that he has [illegible] Anglo-Indians [illegible].

It is a fact that [illegible] Afghans are [illegible] about [illegible]. This [illegible] to be an ominous [illegible] Afghans do not wander so far south [illegible] any peaceful purpose. [illegible] war were to be renewed [illegible] nowadays [illegible]. The situation has an ugly look and there is a prayer on every one's lips that the cloud will not entail a storm.

D'Annunzio's Son Makes Stage Debut

Rome, July 8.—Gabriele Steno, son of Signor D'Annunzio, recently made a most successful appearance in a drama by his father, who hopes that his namesake will attain renown as early as himself. No living writer, save, perhaps, Rudyard Kipling, leapt earlier into fame than did Gabriele D'Annunzio. He was twenty when he published his first volume of verse, which made an extraordinary sensation. He is still on the sunny side of two and forty. It is only lately that he has cared to appear in the role of the family man. The son is a manly young fellow, and many predictions are made that he will become a notable figure on the Italian stage.

GREW MISS LEWIS' HAIR

PROVE IT

The Great Danderine Never Fails to Produce the Desired Results

MISS Lewis' hair was very thin and it was less than two feet in length when she began using Danderine. She says her hair and scalp are now fairly teeming with new life and vigor.

That's the main secret of this great remedy's success as a hair grower. It enlivens, invigorates and fairly electrifies the hair glands and tissues of the scalp, causing unusual and unheard-of activity on the part of these two most important organs, resulting in a strenuous and continuous growth of the hair.

Dear Doctor Knowlton:—

You know I told you in my first letter that my hair would not reach much below my shoulders, and that all of it together only made one tiny braid.

I am sending you my photograph, which I had taken at Stevens Bros. It tells the whole story better than I can tell it.

Everybody I know is using Danderine, so you see I am doing something to show my appreciation.

Sincerely yours, (Miss) EVA LEWIS.

Danderine makes the scalp healthy and fertile and keeps it so. It is the greatest scalp fertilizer and therefore the greatest hair-producing remedy the world has ever known. It is a natural food and a wholesome medicine for both the hair and scalp. Even a 25c bottle of it will put more genuine life in your hair than a gallon of any other hair tonic ever made. It shows results from the very start.

NOW at all druggists in three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1. per bottle

FREE. To show how quickly Danderine acts we will send a large sample free by return mail to any one who sends this advertisement to the Knowlton Danderine Co., Chicago, with their name and address and 10 cents in silver or stamps to pay postage.

BODY MAKES ITS OWN DRUGS, STARTLING FIND OF DOCTOR.

Englishman Discovers That Each Organ Produces a "Hormones," Which Excites Neighbor in Series to Action

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, July 8.—As a result of discoveries made by himself and others, Professor Starling brought forward in his Croonian lectures at the College of Physicians an important new view as to the method in which the body does its work.

The [illegible] of the body was [illegible] its own work [illegible] The new view which Professor Starling brings forward is that each organ produces a chemical substance which excites the next organ in the series [illegible]

[illegible]

For instance [illegible] their proper hormone [illegible] cannot even be galvanized into activity by an [illegible] current.

It may be asked what is the practical value of this discovery? It marks an important advance in the rational treatment of disease. The underlying idea in giving drugs at all in disease is that we can [illegible] thereby the way in which the organs of the body do their work and correct departures from a healthy mode of action.

But why should we look for such drugs merely in the vegetable and mineral kingdoms? Surely the most rational way would be to employ the chemical substances which the body makes itself in order to secure healthy action. At present only some six or seven of these substances are known. The task of the future will be to discover what is the hormone for each organ, where it is produced, the order in which it acts. Then doctors will be in a position to intervene effectively and arrest the progress of disease.

A somewhat startling suggestion made by the lecturer was that in these hormones may ultimately be found a method of controlling or exciting growth. It will be remembered that H. G. Wells in "The Food of the Gods, and How It Came to Earth," has anticipated in a picturesque and ingenious way this important conclusion of Professor Starling. Under the name of "Boomfood" he has imagined a combination of drugs of very much the same order as those Professor Starling is beginning to discover.

No New Shows at Theatres—Plenty Amusements at Summer Parks

Colonial Theatre

On Monday evening, July 17, the regular season of the [illegible] will open with "The Pearl and the Pumpkin." The event is a [illegible] one. The Colonial [illegible] before begin its season so early [illegible] offers is [illegible] one of the most [illegible] productions that have ever been made in this country. It is the first New England spectacle to be presented on the stage, and it will vie in magnificence and extent with the most pretentious that England has sent [illegible]. Droll types of Yankee character have been seen and relished up to this time in comedy and comedy drama, but [illegible] had the spectacle [illegible]. The whole dramatic construction, which has been made by Paul West and W. W. Denslow, with music by John W. Bratton will be a delightful combination of Yankeeland and Fairyland.

Scenery, costumes, properties and effects in "The Pearl and the Pumpkin" [illegible] the most elaborate and [illegible]. The company engaged [illegible] is a [illegible] includes Edwin Stevens, [illegible] George Richards, Harry McDonough, Thomas Whiffen, Jr., [illegible] John Mayon, Gertie Carlisle, [illegible], Ida Hawley, [illegible] Hutchinson and others well known. The advance sale will open Thursday [illegible].

Boston Theatre

The season of 1904-5 at the Boston Theatre came to a close last night with the fall of the final curtain on "The Earl and the Girl." It [illegible] four weeks [illegible] great variety of [illegible]. The [illegible] season will [illegible] August 26 with the company headed by Jefferson De Angelis in "Fantana."

Tremont Theatre

"Kafoozelum," the musical novelty at the Tremont Theatre, will enter upon its third week to-morrow night. If the prime object of a comic opera is to make people laugh, and to please audiences with charming music, then "Kafoozelum" measures up to the Tremont's standing. It is confessedly a production for those who do not wish to think too deeply or too often on a Summer night. [illegible] investigation, and its [illegible] deviate from the plot whenever there is a reasonable chance to introduce a catchy topical song or inject a new joke. But the large audiences that have crowded the Tremont the past two weeks have shown their appreciation of "Kafoozelum" and have bestowed unstinted praise upon the production, the music, the humor and the strong cast of players, headed by Dave Lewis and Elfie Fay. Beginning with this week the midweek matinees will be abandoned at the Tremont during the Summer period, and afternoon performances will be given only on Saturdays during July and August. "Kafoozelum" will be followed by [illegible] July [illegible].

Keith's Theatre

The vaudeville bill announced from Keith's for the coming week is one of the strongest and best balanced bills offered from that popular playhouse for some time. Included in the list of entertainers will be Henry V. Donnelly, formerly of Donnelly and Girard, of "Natural Gas" fame, who will offer a dramatized version of a series of stories which have been made popular by a New York newspaper entitled "Mr. and Mrs. Nagg," which is said to abound in laugh provoking material; Ray L. Royce, the popular [illegible] comedian, who will be remembered hereabouts for his interpretation of the part of the old organ builder in "York State Folks"; Theresa Dorgeval, a [illegible] and talented operatic prima donna, who comes direct from Paris; Mosher, Houghton and Mosher, one of the best comedy and trick bicycle organizations in the business; Matthews and Ashley, cross fire conversational comedians; the Misses Cook and Clinton, experts with the pistol and rifle; McPhee and Hill, in a horizontal bar and casting act; Murphy and Francis, "real coon" comedians, vocalists and dancers; Gregory and Wood, skilful jugglers and hoop rollers; Ferguson and Watson, conversational comedians, and Joe Goodwin, a clever and amusing boy monologist. The Fadettes will make an entire change of selections, and a complete new list of motion pictures will be exhibited by the biograph.

Empire Theatre

The sixth and final week of the Summer season of musical comedy at the Empire Theatre comes to an end with the twelve performances of "The Telephone Girl" during the coming week, starting to-morrow afternoon. During this Summer season the company has given the amusement lovers of Boston and vicinity a series of clean and praiseworthy presentations of popular favorites, and the public appreciation of its efforts has been marked by substantiality in the matter of attendance and by praise for the spirit revealed.

With "The Telephone Girl" it is simply a repetition of what may have been said about "The Belle of New York" and "Jack and the Beanstalk." "The Telephone Girl" makes pleasing and agreeable mid-summer entertainment; it is brisk in action, lively and dashing in character [illegible] with [illegible] and rousing ensembles.

Castle Square Theatre

The management of the Summer season at the Castle Square Theatre announce the conclusion at this theatre of the engagement of the stock company with the performances of the present week, the organization being transferred to the Empire Theatre, where it will continue the season on Monday, the 17th. The final attraction at the Castle Square Theatre will be Leo Trevor's interesting military comedy, "Brother Officers," last seen in Boston at the Castle Square Theatre two seasons ago. The story of the play deals with the experiences of an English army officer who has been promoted from the ranks during the Indian campaign and is transferred to a home regiment officered largely by men who have gained their positions by wealth and social influence.

Bowdoin Square Theatre

"Because She Loved" is the [illegible] of the [illegible] that is to be seen every afternoon and evening this week, excepting Wednesday, the Hunt benefit occasion, at the Bowdoin Square Theatre. The drama abounds with strong sensational work, the usual amount of good comedy, many pathetic episodes and some splendid dramatic action, with an abundance of acceptable realistic scenery.

The cast has in it all the favorites of the Lothrop stock company at the Bowdoin.

Austin & Stone's Museum

Dusky maidens all the way from Louisiana and up through the sunny south to old Virginia, are coming to Austin & Stone's this week to entertain with south[illegible]. Yesterday [illegible] from Norfolk [illegible] the grand [illegible] together for a three months' tour in the North. They will sing the plaintive songs of the plantation, the hymns and chants of the day before the war. The quartets of [illegible] the popular songs [illegible] sunny South and the ragtime selections of the present time will be given by people who can sing them with the true dialect and ex[illegible]. The vaudeville bill includes Powell's "Minstrel Maids."

The Hunt Testimonial

One of the greatest benefit bills ever offered in Boston will be presented at the Bowdoin Square Theatre next Wednesday [illegible] annual testimonial to Mr. Jay Hunt, general stage director. The program will consist of [illegible] great acts from five great plays, with all the members of the Lothrop Stock Company on the stage, and in addition a large number of vaudeville acts. [illegible] with Messrs. [illegible], Edwin Denison, Charles Wheelock and Florence Hale in the cast. This will be followed by act two of "Romeo and Juliet," with Mr. Miller as Romeo and Miss Charlotte Hunt as Juliet. Next is the second act of "Ten Nights in a Bar-Room," with Mr. Hunt as Sample Switchel and Mr. Denison and Miss Hunt in other characters. The seventh act of the "Two Orphans" will follow and also an act from "Rip Van Winkle," with Mr. Hunt as Rip.

At the Parks and Beaches

Norumbega Park

This seems to be a Summer that is remarkable for its trolley trips, if one may judge from the large crowds all day [illegible] that are journeying on the electrics out to Norumbega Park. Norumbega Park is reached by the big observation electrics of the Commonwealth avenue street railway and by the other electric lines covering the Newtons, Wellesley, Waltham, Natick, Framingham, Lexington, Concord and Lowell.

Norumbega Park never looked more cheerful and picturesque and was never crowded with a greater number of novel attractions than it is this season. The most flattering comments are heard on all sides for the improvements made in the zoological garden.

In the covered open-air theatre the coming week a very strong vaudeville program has been provided which will be headed by Mme. Schell in her remarkable lion act. J. Francis Dooley, assisted by Dorothy Brenner and [illegible], will present a singing and dancing act entitled "The Club Man and the Show Girls." Waller and Magill [illegible] talk and songs. Zelda and Dee [illegible] will be seen in a [illegible] act. Ethel and Rosa [illegible] eccentric comedy conversational and dancing act. The Kinograph will display some interesting moving pictures.

Paragon Park

The Palm Garden has proven the finishing touch to Paragon Park [illegible] by the sea. Since the Palm Garden opened it has been comfortably crowded afternoon and evening without a moment even approaching idleness. It is one of the most attractive spots on the grounds and always cool, for whichever way the wind blows it comes in through the windows on one of the four sides of the building.

A sensation is offered in the free open air circus this week. Speedy, the world renowned high diver, who was the hit of the Fourth of July bill, has been engaged to do his terrific dive twice every day the coming week, beginning to-day. He will present the feat exactly as he did it at the St. Louis Fair. Speedy dives 110 feet through the air from the top of a ladder into a tank of water thirty-six inches deep, ten feet long and four feet wide. His stand at the top of the ladder is within a few feet of the very top point of the electric tower. Another great act on the free circus bill is that of Hacker and Lester, the celebrated bicycle riders. The sensational work is only equalled by the comic side of the entertainment. The third big act is a hold-over from last week—the Zeno, Jordan, Zeno troupe of acrobats. The usual [illegible] concerts and other features will continue during the coming week. H. F. Blaney is still singing "to beat the band." On the Midway the shows are all doing a thriving business. Fair Japan, the Wild West, Streets of Cairo and the Trip to the North Pole and Klondike permit one to visit many strange lands without leaving home.

CHIEF CRUSH FEATHER

Lexington Park

No one should visit Lexington Park without ascending the observation tower to have a view of the surrounding country. The tower is a hundred feet or more high, on the highest point of land in the park, and on all sides are rare country scenes that can hardly be duplicated anywhere in these parts.

The athletic field, with the baseball grounds, for the use of all patrons of the park, is proving a very popular new feature. Hardly an afternoon passes without a match game being played. The baby camel is getting [illegible] now to have its [illegible]. All visitors should make a point of visiting the deer park, elk preserve and zoological garden [illegible] a few moments the camel nursery and at the same time take in all the other strange and fascinating animal sights within the inclosures of this extensive department of Lexington Park.

Beginning Monday afternoon there will be a complete change of [illegible] in the vaudeville program [illegible] J. W. Gorman's [illegible] Vaudeville Company, one of the strongest organizations touring the Summer theatres, will be the attraction, and it contains some of the best comedians, the best dancers, the most perfectly trained athletes to be found in one company. There has been no better entertainment provided for this theatre during the present season. The Kinograph will display a new series of pictures on a variety of subjects both interesting and amusing.

Bass Point, Nahant

The warm weather of the past week has brought out the merits of Bass Point, Nahant, as a cool and comfortable resort in a manner most convincing to the Boston public. Schools have been closed only a short time, yet already Bass Point is being chosen as the site for a good many picnic parties, for there is the double attraction of a delightful sail down the harbor and back in place of the joys of a day [illegible] New England.

The [illegible] open-air theatre with first class vaudeville shows afternoons and evenings and the new dance hall at the end of the Point. The bill for the coming week [illegible] comedian [illegible] and Ramon in a travesty sketch; Professor [illegible], an Italian [illegible]; McAvoy and Hughes in a comedy singing and [illegible] sketch, and Miss Hecla, [illegible] comedienne.

Point of Pines

A free display of fireworks will be given every night, weather permitting, except Sunday, as one of the many attractions at the Point of Pines, beginning to-morrow night. Last Wednesday Manager J. Raymond closed a contract with the National Fireworks Company of Boston, whereby that concern is to supply and set off every night from July 10 until the close of the season a display of fireworks [illegible]. The display will be given at 9.45 every night after the show in the rustic theatre, so that patrons [illegible] both the [illegible] and the fireworks display. There will be no display on Sunday nights nor on nights when there is rain or heavy fog.

In the rustic theatre, where there are plenty of free seats, J. W. Gorman's New York Vaudeville Stars will give the entertainment. The program is headed by Torcat's Dog and Pony Circus. The free dancing [illegible] and several new specimens have been added to the free zoo. E. L. Stafford makes a balloon ascension every afternoon at 3.45, and there are concerts afternoon and evening by the Lynn Cadet Band of twenty-five pieces. To-day the Milo Burk Band of [illegible] will join the Lynn Cadet Band in giving the concerts.

To Provincetown

A fine opportunity is afforded tourists and excursionists, daily, to see the cream of our navy just off Provincetown. The steamer Cape Cod passes right through the fleet. Be sure and take your camera, for it is a chance for the [illegible] such as is seldom offered. Attractions are also offered to the historian [illegible], as Provincetown offers opportunities for research, and to the pleasure seekers no better trip can be found on the Atlantic coast than this all-day excursion to the tip of the Cape.

The Cape Cod leaves the wharf at 400 Atlantic avenue daily at 9 a. m., Sundays and holidays at 9.30. An hour and a half stop is made at Provincetown, giving ample time for dinner and sight seeing.

CHAPTER CXXII.—Continued

"I AM serious," he said; and his voice sounded strangely, weak and uncertain.

"Why?" she asked.

"Well, we are nearly at Marseilles," he said.

"And are you sorry?" she asked ingenuously.

"Yes, awfully. Aren't you?"

"Yes, I am," she said. "I should like the good old Seafoam to go on forever."

"So should I," he answered enthusiastically, and was bold enough to look into her beautiful [illegible] eyes [illegible] frankly. [illegible]

"Do tell me! I am sure something is wrong."

"I don't quite know," he said awkwardly, "whether everything is right or everything is wrong."

"Dear me," she laughed, "is it as bad as all that? Have you fallen in love, or——"

"Yes, I have," [illegible] suddenly [illegible] Menzies," she gasped.

"You, of All Men!

Who is it?"

He looked at her helplessly. There was in his solemn, honest eyes the look of a wounded dog seeking in vain to speak. He shook his head.

"Don't tell me it is Judith Mort!" she exclaimed. "I saw you just now, talking very seriously."

"Good [illegible]," he said, indignantly. "What an idea!"

"Who is it then? Tell me. I insist!"

"[illegible] tell me that you do not know," he said huskily.

"Of course I don't. How should I? I had [illegible] and I am not at all sure that I [illegible]. Come, sir, own up. Who is it?"

Dick Menzies gave a quick hunted look around, as if he were in desperation seeking some loophole of escape. Then he squared his broad and muscular shoulders, clenched his fists and turned to her.

"Mary," he said hoarsely, "don't you know that it is you?"

The girl started, went very red, and then very pale.

"Captain Menzies!" she exclaimed faintly.

"Mary, I [illegible] with all my heart and soul!" he cried. The thing was done now. It was too late to go back. He forgot everything but that the supreme moment of his life had come, and, for good or ill, he was telling the woman he loved the long-cherished secret of his heart.

"I Love You,"

he said; and his deep-toned voice took on a softer cadence. "I have loved you ever since the first moment I saw you years ago. Don't you remember? There has never been another woman in my life or thoughts, and there never can be, whatever you say to me now, or think of me. I love you, heart of my heart. I have tried so hard to keep my secret from you, because I saw that you loved another man. But I have been loyal to you. Now—oh, I don't know how to tell you properly, [illegible] things are different. Poor old Stephen"——

"Don't, don't!" she cried piteously. "Please don't!"

"Oh, but I must!" said Menzies fiercely. "I must tell you something now. You must know, even if you sent me away from you, and I never see your dear face again except in my dreams. I am not a conceited fool, and I know quite well that no man can ever occupy the place that poor Stephen did in your heart. Still, I thought, madly, perhaps, that in time you might be able to—to find just a little corner for a man who would be your slave for life."

"Oh, Captain Menzies, have pity on me! Please do not say any more. Oh, why did you—why? We were such and I—I thought that you—that'——"

"You thought that I only regarded you as you regard me—as a good friend. Well, so I do; the best friend a man ever had. But to me you are so much more—so very much more! That is what I want you to [illegible] Mary, and I want [illegible] wife. [illegible] little," he pleaded, [illegible] caught her hand in his [illegible]. She did not take it away. She was crying softly to herself, and her tears glistened like opals in the brilliant sunshine of that Southern May morning.

"I am so sorry," she murmured faintly—"so very, very sorry."

"Can't you love me a little?" he pleaded.

She shook her head.

"I cannot be anything but frank and honest with you, Captain Menzies," she said; "and, therefore, I must tell you that I do not love you like that. I can never love any other man."

"But in time," he insisted, "in time perhaps you might forget a little and——"

"I can never forget."

"And learn to love me," he went on, unheeding her interruption. "Oh, I will make you. Such love as mine must create some response. Mary, be merciful. Think you are young, a mere child. You have all your life before you. I want you to share it with me. Won't you? Oh, I wish I could say what I mean properly and nicely, but somehow everything seems different, and I have clean forgotten all the pretty things I was going to say to you."

She smiled through her tears.

"You are a dear, good chum," she said, softly, "and I wish—oh, so much!—that I could tell you what you want to hear. But I can't." She shook her head, and a sad, far-away [illegible] eyes, and the man knew that while he was pouring out his secret in her ears, and telling her of his great love, she was thinking of a dead man—the man who was already enthroned in her heart as

Her Husband for All Time.

A fierce anger and resentment rose in his soul. It was cruel and unjust. Why should it be thus? Was she to throw away [illegible] youth [illegible] life and happiness into the grave of a man who had once won her heart?

"Believe me, Mary," he said, "I would never have spoken like this if—if he had been alive. You know that, surely?"

"Yes, I know that," she answered. "And I want to tell you something, Dick—I shall call you Dick, since you have called me Mary."

"Oh, my love!" He pressed her little brown hand passionately to his lips and covered it with kisses. "Mary, my love, my darling!"

"No, no," she said severely, snatching her hand from his grasp. "Please don't! You wouldn't, I know, if you knew how you hurt me. It makes me feel so disloyal. Dick, I want to tell you something. I don't know whether I shall be able to make you understand. I don't suppose I shall, but I must say it, nevertheless."

She spoke very calmly and deliberately. Her manner was a curious contrast to the man's.

He caught his breath, and bent closer to her.

"What is it, darling?" he asked eagerly. "Tell me. I shall understand. And oh, do forgive me if I have hurt you! I——"

"Hush! Now [illegible] good self again, Dick. Look on me as a friend—a sister, nothing more."

"I can't!" he groaned. "I will be honest, too. I simply cannot."

"I am sorry," she said quietly, "but I am sure you can. There surely is not such a word as 'cannot' in your vocabulary. [illegible]"

"Not now," he said lugubriously. "I am just your slave, to do with as you like."

"Then slaves must obey their mistresses," she said, trying hard to smile naturally. "I command you.

You Must Obey."

He brushed his hand across his brows and frowned. Things were certainly turning out very differently to what he had anticipated.

"I'll try and be good, Mary," he said dolefully. "What was it that you were going to say to me? Don't be too cruel."

"I am not going to be cruel," she answered quickly. "Don't talk like that. I am going to be brutally frank, and you'll probably go away in a minute or two, never wanting to see me again, hating and despising me. Anyhow, I am going to tell you."

"Mary, what do you mean?

You Speak Strangely."

"I want to tell you, Dick—yes, I insist on calling you Dick—that I like you, and admire you, and trust you more than any man I know."

"Thank you!" he said, rather grimly.

"And," she went on, "I do not know [illegible] say that of any other man that I would rather trust my life to."

"Mary, do you mean that? Will you marry me?"

"Wait. I have told you exactly what I think of you, Dick. I would trust you with anything."

"With yourself?"

"Yes, with myself," she answered; "but at the same time, I must tell you that I do not love you [illegible] the way you love me. [illegible]

She Shook Her Head.

"[illegible]," she said. "No, I will be perfectly honest with you, Dick. I have loved one man in my life. I have given him all that there is of my heart. There can never be another man in my life. Oh, I know that I must hurt you when I say this to you, but I do not mean to be cruel.

"You are and will always be my very dear and trusted friend. But you can never be any more. Don't think that I do not fully appreciate the honor you have done me by saying what you have said, by asking me to be your wife, because that would not be fair to me. I only wish, dear Dick, that I could answer you differently; but I cannot."

"I knew it," he said gloomily. "I knew it all along. And yet I had to tell you. Somehow or other it seemed inevitable. Oh, Mary, my darling, can't you give me one little gleam of hope? Won't you ever be able to love me—love me just a little? All my life, it seems, I have loved you and [illegible] I have [illegible] of my heart and [illegible] for your sake. I have seen you give yourself to another man—yes, a man far worthier of you than I. Still, it has been hard. And now, when you are alone, and I am not wronging him, I come to you and ask you to give me just a little of your love—oh, surely in your great heart [illegible] little love left over to spare for a poor devil like me!—you turn to me, and say"——

"Dick," she interrupted sternly, "you must not talk like that.

I Will Not Listen.

I have told you the truth. If you cannot understand"——

"But I am trying to understand," he said.

"Then you must force yourself to realize that I do not and never can love you."

"And you will not marry me? You won't trust me to take care of you?"

"I never said that," she answered.

The man started.

"What do you mean, Mary?" he exclaimed incredulously. "Do you mean to to say that you"——

"Knowing what you know now," she said, "and fully realizing exactly what I think of you, if you still wish me to be your wife, I will marry you. There, I have said what I wanted to say."

"You will marry me?" he gasped.

"Yes, Dick."

"Though you do not love me?"

"Yes."

"Mary!" He held out his hands to her in dumb appeal.

"Do you hate me?" she asked.

He shook his head. He was dazed and dumfounded. She had suddenly become a [illegible] to him. The [illegible] of her astonishing statement had literally taken his breath away.

"Hate you!" he exclaimed at last. "Mary, I love you! My life—my love! Oh, I will make you love me!"

"You must not talk like that," she interrupted, "or I shall change my mind. There must be no misunderstanding between us. Do you clearly appreciate that? I am not going to give you any false impression. I regard you as and love you as

The Dearest Friend

I have, dear Dick. I feel that I can implicitly trust you with everything, tell you everything, confide in you as I could my own brother, if I had one, but, as to anything else"—— She shook her head with a very determined shake. "I do not love you. You can never be to my anything but a friend. You must always look upon me as a married woman."

"Mary!"

"Yes, a married woman, Dick. I have a husband already enthroned in my heart."

"Stephen?" he asked.

"Yes, Stephen," she replied. And her eyes gleamed with the light that just then he would have sold his soul to see there for him.

He buried his face in his hands. The position was intolerable.

"Mary," he groaned almost inaudibly—"Mary, my love, my life!"

"Now you know everything," she said gently. "It is for you to choose."

"To choose what?" he asked, a little wildly.

"Whether you will marry me," she said.

The Proposal.

Dick Menzes could scarcely believe the evidence of his senses. Did he hear aright or was he dreaming? Mary Armstrong was asking him to choose whether or not he would marry her.

"M[illegible]," he murmured, "do you mean that?"

"I mean," she answered, "that if you are willing to take me just as I am, knowing what you know, and asking for no more than my genuine, honest friendship, I will marry you, Dick."

He held out his arms.

"No, no!" she said, with a determined little shake of her head. "There can be no question of love in it at all. You that. We must clearly understand each other and start quite fair. I have told you that I do not love you, Dick, and that all my love has been given to another man—the man who, dead or alive, I shall regard as my true husband through all time."

Must Not Forget

"But he was not your husband," protested the man, a little resentfully.

"In my heart he was and still is," she answered. And Dick Menzies saw a look in her beautiful, steadfast, sad eyes that he never forgot. It was a look of sublime love and trust and faith, and he never envied Stephen anything in his life as he envied him that look, even though he were now dead.

"What a strange girl you are!" he said, faintly.

"Am I?" She smiled. "Well, you must take me as I am, or leave me. Which is it to be, Dick?"

"Need you ask?" he replied quickly. "My darling, yes—yes, a thousand times yes!"

"Fully realizing what you are doing?"

"Fully," he answered.

She shook her head doubtfully.

"I'm afraid you don't, Dick," she said, "and that one day you will bitterly regret it."

"That I never shall," he said, taking her hand in his and raising it to his lips. "My wife," he said, reverently. "My wife that is to be!"

He did not notice, so occupied was he that his action, if not, indeed, his words, had a witness. Neither did Mary Armstrong see that close behind them was Judith Mort.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Mothers Should Watch the Development of Their Daughters—Interesting Experiences of Misses Borman and Mills.

Every mother possesses information which is of vital interest to her young daughter.

Too often this is never imparted or is withheld until serious harm has resulted to the growing girl through her ignorance of nature's mysterious and wonderful laws and penalties.

Girls' over-sensitiveness and modesty often puzzle their mothers and baffle physicians, as they so often withhold their confidence from their mothers and conceal the symptoms which ought to be told to their physician at this critical period.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude; when she is a mystery to herself and friends, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will at this time prepare the system for the coming change, and start the menstrual period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities.

Hundreds of letters from young girls and from mothers, expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them, have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., at Lynn, Mass.

Miss Mills has written the two following letters to Mrs. Pinkham, which will be read with interest:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (First Letter.)

I am but fifteen years of age, am depressed, have dizzy spells, chills, headache and backache, and as I have heard that you can give helpful advice to girls in my condition, I am writing you."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (Second Letter.)

It is with the feeling of [illegible] that I write to you to tell [illegible] your [illegible] medicine has done for me. [illegible] in regard to my condition [illegible] several doctors, but they failed to understand my case, and I did not receive any benefit from their treatment. I followed your advice [illegible] Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound [illegible] and well and all the [illegible] I had at that time have [illegible].—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable [illegible] headaches [illegible] regular [illegible] I am [illegible] Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me.—Matilda Borman, Farmington, Iowa.

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and tell her every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. She will receive advice absolutely free, from a source that has no rival in the experience of woman's ills, and it will, if followed, put her on the right road to a strong, healthy and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of cures of female ills of any medicine that the world has ever known. Why don't you try it?

Boston was writhing yesterday under a wave of intense heat, aided and abetted by a mean humidity of 80 degrees. To-day the extreme heat will continue, says the weather forecaster. There is no relief in sight, not even a shower will serve to cool things temporarily. Monday may bring a change of conditions which will make the weather a bit more bearable.

The Weather Bureau thermometer in Boston registered 89 degrees yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, when it was highest. But in the streets where the sun glared and paving stones reflected the sun's rays the heat was greater than that. That is usually the case. One year ago the thermometer registered but 79, ten degrees less than yesterday.

Several Prostrations.

There were seven heat prostrations reported in Boston. This is the record for this year. In the suburbs within a radius of fifty miles the heat was felt, too, but along the seashore there was a comforting breeze which blew away enough of the heat to make it worth while. In the city the shirtwaist man developed into a reality, particularly in the business districts. At the lunch hour hundreds left the offices in their shirt sleeves.

Despite all efforts to the contrary, however, the heat was felt widely. One result of it was a rush to soda fountains and other places where [illegible] refreshment is served, and ice cream was a luxury. In the shopping district the heat showed its terror by the fact that there were few women on the streets. Around the seashores the Summer people and those who were lucky enough to have a half holiday revelled in the water.

There will be a great pilgrimage out of the city to-day, as the heat is to continue, and Revere and Nantasket beaches will probably reap a harvest. The Common, too, will probably be crowded all day.

More than 100,000 people visited Revere Beach during the day. There were 3,700 bathers, the record number for any Saturday of the season. In preparation for the warm weather promised for to-day, the State Bathhouse will open at 9 o'clock this morning instead of 11 o'clock, as has been the custom.

Some of Those Overcome.

The heat prostrations reported yesterday were as follows:

Mrs. Ruth King, aged sixty four, of No. 24 Union Park street, was overcome while walking on Columbus avenue, near Berkeley street, shortly before noon. Taken to City Hospital. Her condition is serious.

Hugh LeClair, No. 21 Montvale avenue, Stoneham, overcome near Chelsea square while riding in a Malden and Melrose car. He was revived in a nearby drug store and later continued to his home.

E. G. Tutein, senior member of the firm of E. G. Tutein & Co., expressmen, overcome at his place of business, No. 164 Milk street, at noon. He was taken to the Relief Station and is in a serious condition.

Patrick Killilea, No. 15 Walnut street, Charlestown, a carpenter at work on the building No. 21 Decatur street, Charlestown, overcome and fell to the ground, thirty-five feet. He was taken to the Relief Hospital, where he is being treated for contusions on the back and legs.

Charles M. Schneider, forty-two years old, was overcome by the heat at 7:45 p. m. last night while in a palm garden on

UNCLE'S AFFECTION LED TO BIG DIVORCE SCANDAL

Mrs. C. W. Morse, principal in the most tangled divorce scandal of a Decade.

C. W. Morse Now Exonerated from Complicity in Plot to Get Rid of His Wife.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 8. The whole secret of the Dodge-Morse marital scandal, which has assumed national importance, was disclosed to-night through papers filed by Lawyer Abraham Hummel, one of those indicted on the celebrated case.

By the new evidence Charles W. Morse is exonerated from all blame for the conspiracy to get rid of his wife. Mrs. Catherine Gelshenen is cleared from all knowledge of the case.

Instead there looms up as the central figure in the whole amazing affair the wealthy Captain James T. Morse, of Bath, Me., uncle of Charles W. Morse. And his alleged motive was apart from anything yet developed in the Dodge-Morse case. His love for the children of Charles W. Morse led him to do all he did.

Mr. Hummel filed yesterday only a formal motion on his own behalf. It was not important. But it discloses that one of the new witnesses before the grand jury recently was Captain Morse, and thereby hangs the entire tale.

The evidence given by Captain Morse, who is an ice shipper and vessel man, verifies Charles Morse's declaration that he had acted honorably throughout and had done all in his power to protect the good name of his wife. He knew nothing of the plot.

The facts brought out in new evidence show that District Attorney Jerome hit wide of the mark when he ordered the home of Mrs. Gelshenen, on Fifth avenue, invaded by subpoena servers, as it is now known that Mrs. Gelshenen had nothing whatever to do with the suits to bring about a separation of Charles W. Morse from his wife.

Mrs. Morse was Clemence Cowles. She married Charles F. Dodge and divorced him. Then she married Morse. To secure him a divorce an effort was made to prove the decree invalid. This was the basis of the whole muddle that has brought men close to prison.

The motive behind the Morse divorce proceedings develops a most remarkable trait in human nature, and was based upon the affection of Captain Jim Morse for his favorite nephew, Charles.

Captain Morse believed that Mrs. Dodge after she became Mrs. Morse caused what appeared to be a coolness between Mr. Morse and his children, Benjamin, Irwin, Harry and Anna. They are now living in the home of Captain "Jim" at Bath.

It was to try and restore the love of Mr. Morse for his children that Captain "Jim" secretly started the proceedings to separate man and wife so that the father and his boys and girl could be as they were before the first Mrs. Morse died.

Cost Captain $70,000.

This effort on the part of Captain Morse cost him $70,000, paid to Abraham H. Hummel and others who were interested in the various suits growing out of the original divorce action.

When Captain "Jim" Morse was brought before the Grand Jury on June 27 last to testify in the Dodge-Morse alleged criminal conspiracy it was the unexpected climax to nearly three years of most remarkable events. Captain Morse in the end appeared voluntarily before the Grand Jury and made the most astounding statement ever recorded there.

The Grand Jury were so quickly convinced by the story of Captain Morse that, without leaving their seats, they found an indictment against Abraham H. Hummel, Benjamin Steinhardt and Charles F. Dodge for conspiracy to deceive the Supreme Court and defeat the ends of justice.

This indictment superseded the pending indictment against Lawyers Hummel and Steinhardt, in which the additional names of former Justice Edgar L. Fursman and Edward C. Brackett appear.

Dodge-Morse Marital Scandal in a Nutshell

In 1887 they came to New York and separated.

In 1895 Dodge went to Atlanta.

In 1903 Mrs. Morse was informed by Lawyer Abe Hummel, representing Mrs. Dodge, that the decree of divorce of Mr. and Mrs. Dodge was collusive and irregular. It [illegible] intimated that Mrs. Morse could not be the legal wife of Mr. Morse.

The case went to court and the Dodge divorce was annulled, leaving Mrs. Morse the legal wife of Dodge.

Then the [illegible] was annulled, leaving Mrs. Dodge-Morse apparently Morse's wife.

Action was begun against Dodge for perjury. He disappeared. Mrs. Dodge went to Europe. Dodge was arrested in Texas and extradited to New York. He confessed, his statement disclosing it was said a conspiracy to separate Mr. and Mrs. Morse.

Lawyer Abe Hummel filed papers last night giving evidence which exonerates Charles W. Morse from all blame in the alleged conspiracy to get rid of his wife. By Mr. Hummel's motion it is represented that Captain James T. Morse, of Bath, Me., uncle of Charles W. Morse, secretly started the proceedings to separate Mr. and Mrs. Morse, believing that Mrs. Morse had caused a coolness between Mr. Morse and his children.

DROPPED 1,000 FEET TO SAVE WOMAN.

Areonaut Canfield, in Sight of 5,000 Persons at Lynn Leaps From a Balloon and Is Hurt By Striking Side of a House

HEROIC ACT SAVES MRS. STAFFORD'S LIFE

Gas Was Leaking and Weight of Two Persons Was Making Balloon Fall When the Man Jumped With His Parachute

Special to the Sunday American.

Lynn, July 8. Straight down a thousand feet to what seemed certain death, William Canfield, a Boston aeronaut, leaped to-night from his balloon in order that Mrs. Camille Stafford, who was with him in the balloon, might have a chance for her life. She escaped unhurt; he was badly shocked and hurt by striking a house as his parachute was swung in the strong wind. Five thousands persons witnessed his startling act of heroism.

At the time he leaped Canfield and Mrs. Stafford, who also is an aeronaut, were in the balloon over a most thickly populated part of Lynn. The balloon was leaking badly and their combined weight was dragging it down, slowly at first then rapidly, as 5,000 persons looked on. Canfield saw that the only way to save the woman would be for him to cut loose in his parachute.

Woman Lifted to Safety.

After a word of caution to her, telling her to remain with the balloon until it passed over the meadows a mile away, he cut the rope and plunged straight down. The balloon, which had been in danger of turning upside down, immediately righted itself when relieved of the man's weight, and lifted the woman beyond danger.

Canfield came through the air like a shot for fifty feet or more, then suddenly the wind caught his parachute and it flew open. But then the breeze was too strong. He had leaped intending to land in a spot where there were not a great many houses. The wind swept him out of his course, however, and he was thrown violently against a house, that of J. Frank Miller, of No. 124 Henry avenue.

Meanwhile the spectators, knowing that it had been the plan for the man and woman to leap farther out when the balloon reached the meadows, had watched Canfield struggling high up in the air with tense attention. When he dropped from the balloon they ran on, and when he struck the house, falling insensible in the yard, he received immediate attention.

The force of his fall had smashed the wooden gutter of the house and otherwise damaged it. Persons in the house lifted him up and an ambulance was sent for. On the way to the hospital he revived.

His First Thought for the Woman.

"Is she safe?" was his first question.

Then he was told that Mrs. Stafford had remained with the balloon until it passed over the meadows, where she cut loose. She landed safely and came back to Lynn in a carriage to find that Canfield had by his own request, been put on a train for Boston and that his injuries were not serious. She followed on the next train.

Mrs. Stafford is the wife of Eugene I. Stafford, who was himself an aeronaut. On February 17 Stafford killed Maynor B. Tressel, who was in his wife's room at the West Springfield street house. Later he surrendered and made a statement of the affair. Then the case was nolle prossed. Since that time they have not been living together.

The ascension to-night was intended to have taken place on July 4, but owing to contrary winds was postponed. It was given to-night therefore as was originally intended. Before the ascent Canfield and Mrs. Stafford saw that the balloon leaked and sewed it up. In the air the strain on it was so great, however, that the strands parted and allowed the gas to escape. This was what led Canfield to leap.

HEROIC AERONAUT TELLS HOW HE SAVED LIFE OF WOMAN

After being taken to the home of the Staffords, in West Springfield street, Boston, Canfield, in speaking of the balloon incident at Lynn to a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, said:

"It was arranged before we made the ascent that I take the [illegible] first [illegible] the [illegible] of the bad condition of the balloon. I reasoned that it would be better for her to get away from the balloon first and then I could take my chances afterwards.

"This arrangement would have worked nicely if the balloon had completed its ascent. When we were ready to cut away we were in a bad place to make the jump. If there were only one of us with the balloon delay could be made in making the leap, but with two of us it meant that one must take chances to save the other. So what could I do?

"I knew about where I would land and I knew that I was taking big chances on my life. I told her that I would go first and that she was to wait for a more favorable [illegible]. I then cut away.

"The jump carried me all right, and nothing would have come of it if we had had clear ground. I struck the house and carried part of it to the ground with me. When I struck the house my parachute gave out. I feel a dead weight to the ground. In the fall I managed to squirm so that I fell on my feet. I sprained my left ankle besides being badly bruised and stunned by coming in contact with the house. I feel that I came out of it luckily. I am satisfied that Camille came out of it all right."

CARPENTERS, 8 HOURS.

Attleboro, July 8.—Only two contractors met the members of the Carpenters' Union to-day in the conference relative to the demand for an eight-hour day. President Monroe says that the carpenters will insist on their demand on July 17.

Czar's Officer Ordered Guns Blown Up, and Defenders Retired Northward.

St. Petersburg, July 8. A landing of Japanese troops on the Island of Saghalien was officially reported to-night. Dispatches dated July 7 from General Liapunoff, commanding the Russian troops on the island, says:

"At 9 o'clock on the morning of July 7 a Japanese squadron approached the village of Chipivan, about seven miles southwest of Karsakorsk, and opened fire on the shore.

"At 3 p. m. Japanese torpedo boats appeared off Karsakorsk. Russian batteries opened fire on them and compelled the boats to retire. During the bombardment four of the inhabitants of Karsakorsk were killed. The bombardment had been anticipated, and the Commandant had ordered the withdrawal of the defenders northward."

The Japanese fleet covering the landing of troops consisted of two battleships, seven cruisers, three gunboats, thirty-six torpedo boats and ten transports loaded with troops. The Japanese landed at the village of Meree, between Chipivan and Karsakorsk. The commander of the Russian detachment of troops at Karsakorsk ordered the coast defence guns to be blown up and all the govern

YOUNG COUPLE HELD AS GEM ROBBERS.

Frank Riley and wife, Elizabeth, who say they live in New York, are under arrest at police headquarters on suspicion of having robbed a New York jeweler of diamonds and other jewelry worth from $5,000 to $10,000 on June 30.

Between $4,000 and $5,000 worth of the gems have been recovered from the house at No. 221 D street, South Boston, where the couple hired a room a week ago. A large number of rings are said to have been sold to people in South Boston at a small part of their real value. The police are endeavoring to locate these.

"I am glad the jig's up," the officials say he declared. "I have been expecting it every day since we came here. It might as well come now as at any other time."

Quarrel Led to Arrest.

The arrest of the couple was due to a quarrel which they had in their room late Friday night. Charles F. Adams, who runs the house, was startled by hearing four pistol shots in rapid succession. He rushed up to the room occupied by Riley and his wife.

It was full of smoke. The woman stood in the middle of the floor facing her husband and threatening him.

"You needn't act like that with me," she said. "You needn't get so fresh with

WHEN LAWSON SHEDS HIS STAGE FRIGHT

By Morton Birge

Thomas W. Lawson said he feared he would have stage fright on his first public speech in Kansas.

Lawson speak right out in meeting, showing not the slightest fear.
He will bang the "System" brashly. He will make the "Standard" dance.

But he's very timid so far. That is easy to discern,
Else he'd scorched the air in Kansas, made the very cyclones burn.
Wouldn't you be rather nervous, out in Kansas, far from home,

Yes, we know he talked a little, stumbled through the best he could,
Though his brow dripped perspiration and he trembled where he stood;
But 'twas clear that he was rattled, for his efforts at the best,
Only made Jerome look foolish, knocked the "Standard" galley west.

Though he slaughtered Rockefeller, punched the "System" full of dents,
Left Jerome's true valuation something less than thirty cents,
Though he did all this in terror, shaking in his voice and knees,

So we sit in expectation till this stage fright disappears,

Charges "Wizards of Finance" with Cruelty, Robbery and Extortion, and He Declares Their Reign Nearly Over

"THEY WILL NOT STICK AT A SINGLE CRIME"

Calls on "Bleeding Kansas" to Rise in Her Might and Exterminate the Trusts and Their Wrongs for All Time

Ottawa, Kan., July 8.—If Thomas W. Lawson were President of the United States he could not have received a more enthusiastic reception than was accorded him here to-day, when he addressed two magnificent audiences. Fifteen thousand people, at Forest Park, heard him score the "System" this afternoon. Almost as many listened to him this evening when he spoke again.

This second speech was not on the programme. It was delivered for two reasons.

He had not said all he had to say when his voice became tired, after two hours and ten minutes of speaking, and he wanted to give those thousands who were waiting patiently out under the trees of Forest Park, unable to get within hearing, an opportunity to hear his denunciations of Standard Oil and the abuses of the "System" as a whole.

The appearance of the Lawson party was the signal for a tremendous demonstration. Men and women stood on their seats and cheered enthusiastically, waving handkerchiefs, flags and hats.

For more than a minute after reaching the platform the Boston broker stood bowing before the applause began to diminish.

The ovation began all over again when Mr. Lawson was introduced. This office was performed by E. J. Ridgway, of Everybody's Magazine, at the request of the secretary of the Chautauqua, Rev. C. S. Nusbaum, and the president, H. W. Chaffee.

Lawson Described as Earnest, High-Minded Man

"I introduce Thomas W. Lawson to you exactly as he is," said Mr. Ridgway, "a hard-working, earnest, high-minded man, actuated by a sincere desire to help his countrymen and to prevent them from being further plundered by a system which has grown to such proportions in America that it is crowding even honor and honesty from the stage of life."

As Mr. Lawson stepped forward to begin his speech the scene was inspiring. Thousands were on their feet, cheering encouragement. The enthusiasm continued for several minutes. When he had started his speech he was constantly interrupted by applause. The demonstration again became remarkable when, in the course of his address he raised his hands and cried, impressively:

"Every eye in America is focussed on the banner of Kansas, for every man, woman and child knows it has gone forth to battle with the monster who up to now has never meet defeat. And if your banner goes down and trails in the dust—never mind whether it be by treachery, corruption or the brute force of dollars—the American people will surely cry as one man, 'What use for us to try where bleeding, fearless Kansas failed?'"

Long before Lawson's party had left Kansas City the tabernacle at Forest Park began to fill. All the forenoon special trains rolled into Ottawa. They came from all over Eastern Kansas. They were loaded to the platforms with enthusiasts. Hundreds of them, realizing that not half the crowd could hear Mr. Lawson clearly, went directly to the tabernacle, selected seats and ate their lunch in these points of vantage. Others, a thousand at least, waited at the railroad station for the arrival of the author of "Frenzied Finance."

They were an assorted and a democratic crowd. There were farmers in large numbers, college professors, students, preachers, old men and young, women and girls, and children. Everybody was in holiday attire, but the crowd was serious rather than merry.

Hundreds Surround Car and Cheer Boston Man

The Haslemere was on the end of a train, but it had hardly stopped before hundreds of cheering people had surrounded it. There were cries of "Hurrah for Lawson!" "Three cheers and a tiger!" "Down with the Rockefellers!" and cheer upon cheer, showing the temper of the people who had come to see and hear Lawson. It was an hour and a half before Mr. Lawson came out, freshly appareled, immaculately groomed, fresh and bright, as if he had been resting for days instead of only a few hours.

C. H. Estabrook, retired merchant, who was to entertain him, Mayor John Holderman, and H. W. Chaffee, president of the Chatauqua Assembly, had been in the car with him. Carriages were waiting to convey them to Mr. Estabrook's home.

"Carriages," exclaimed Mr. Lawson, "not for me, gentlemen. I shall walk. How far is it? A few blocks? Goodness me, I'd be ashamed to ride that far. We will walk."

From Mr. Estabrook's they went to Forest Park, where followed the ovation and the address. This is what Mr. Lawson said:

I have come to Kansas on a simple mission—to point out to you that the American people are being robbed, by whom, how and what the consequences will be if the robbery is not stayed and an example made of the robbers. I know whereof I speak, and I know my audience. Despite its present supineness I know that when the American people digest the brutal facts that I have to lay before them, and realize that they are absolutely in the power of a few men—and those few the foulest this side of hell—they will stop for one brief minute to pull themselves together and—

Men and Women of Kansas—No race since Father Time took down his scythe and went forth will bow lower to God's and man's laws than the American people, but let the American people once get it firmly into their heads that in their midst is a power working for the annihilation of their comforts, their happiness and their freedom—once let them really make sure, and they will rise and go forth, and before they return there will have been placed between the covers of history pages that will need no bookmark for coming generations to open to; there will have been added to the world's history pages so black and so red that those telling of the doings of St. Petersburg and Paris will appear as though printed with chalk and water.

You don't like this thought, neither do I, but shall I remain silent because the truths I must tell are unpalatable and unflattering? It is my duty to describe to you the terrible conditions I see closing in upon you, so you may be warned before it is too late.

What right have I to speak more than another, you ask?

Felt the System's Yoke and Threw It Off

I speak of a subject that I have spent my life studying. I know the robbers and their methods. I have hunted with their pack and been harried by their hounds. I have felt the yoke of the "system" round my own neck and have thrown it off. Mine is a voice from the prison house, and my statements are not the assumptions of a closet financier or a book-worm student. I speak out of a full knowledge of the facts, and I demand your attention because you need the assistance I can render you.

You will not, you plain people of Kansas, mind if I use the blunt terms of ordinary life, but this talk of mysteriousness is just the conjuror's patter to draw your attention away from his apparatus where the magic is being performed. It's absolute rot, and put forth to assist the "System" in buncoing you out of your savings.

You all have met millionaires; many of you have known in their youth men who have become eminent bankers and financiers. I ask you if these men seemed more gifted, more brainy than you? Smarter and shrewder perhaps, but did it strike you that they could grasp great problems you were debarred from understanding? I am sure it did not. The truth is that there is nothing about legitimate finance any ordinary business mind cannot master in a short time, and nothing about "frenzied finance" requiring either great mental power or intuition to grasp. And the thievery, thuggery and murder of it can all be taken in in half the time it takes the burglar and the pickpocket to acquire a mastery of their professions, and in a much briefer period than the successful counterfeiter must put in to imitate successfully the nation's money.

I pledge you my word that I can hire from the newspapers, law and banking offices of the country 5,000 men at from $5,000 to $15,000 per year each, whom in nine months I can educate to become financiers equal in knowledge and capacity to the so-called great financiers about whom you read in your papers. True, I cannot show them how to become thieves and thugs, but I can equip them with an understanding of all the devices used in the game of making millions over night.

Take, for instance, John A. McCall, president of the New York Life, and recognized in Wall street as a very great financier. A few years ago this wonderful person was an ordinary, hard working insurance agent who knew no more about the business of the nation, of stocks or bonds and "frenzied finance" than one of my $1,000-a-year clerks—as much, but no more.

The next morning after John A. McCall's election as president of the New York Life Insurance Company he was one of the great American financiers, for he had learned over night the unfathomable mysteries you are told the masses cannot comprehend. And this same John A. McCall, only a few years ago an insurance agent at a small salary, is one of America's multimillionaires, for he has been able to save from the salary the policy holders pay him for the use of his great intelligence during the brief term of his presidency of the New York Life, a fortune of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Young Mr. Eckels and His Rapid Elevation

But President McCall is not the only governmental official who gained over night the extraordinary knowledge that befits one to handle high finance. There is James H. Eckels, whom some of you remember as rather a sharp young man in a small Illinois town. In the course of events, by some mysterious turn of the political wheel young Eckels became Controller of the Currency under Grover Cleveland's Secretary of the Treasury, John G. Carlisle, and he had charge of the second bond issue about which so much was written at the time. It was in the dull days of 1893, and the government needed hundreds of millions to meet the deficits in its revenues. The first bond issue was obtained from the philanthropic J. Pierpont Morgan, who with his associates made a profit of $15,000,000 from the same source when Joseph Pulitzer, a rude newspaper owner, served notice on the government that the American people were being buncoed and he made it so sultry in Washington and so hot in Wall Street that the President, against the advice and warnings of the "system" called for public bids for the second $100,000,000 of bonds. The good John A. McCall was one of the syndicate which was in on the expected loot, and though disappointed of the big booty he anticipated, he was among those present at the gathering in the treasury at Washington on the day the public's bids were open. I know, for I was there myself and saw him. Our bids were all submitted and carried into an inner room to be opened by young Mr. Eckels, Controller of the Currency. We waited. Some time elapsed. Suddenly from the inner room young Mr. Eckels reappeared. He held a hurried consultation with John A. McCall and certain other "frenzied financiers," and again disappeared into the inner room. There was another delay, and then the announcement was made that the bulk of the bonds had been awarded to J. Pierpont Morgan, John A. McCall and their associates because they had bid a fraction of one per cent. over the rest of us. It must have been a species of divination that enabled these eminent financiers to grade their bid such a minute fraction above that of their competitors, though at the time meddlesome newspapers insinuated a conspiracy. All I know is that the "system" got the bonds—at a much higher figure, it is true, than it had expected to pay, yet at a price which yielded immediately millions of profit—and James H. Eckels soon afterward was elected president of one of the "system's" leading institutions, the National Commercial Bank of Chicago.

About Hyde and the Squabble in Equitable

Another illustration of the type of man who acquires this marvelous knowledge the "System" says is too deep for your understanding is one Anthony N. Brady of Albany and New York.

You all know I hollered "Thief" so loudly in my story, "Frenzied Finance," that the officers and directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Company got alarmed, and two factions began grabbing for the control of the institution so as to put the evidence of past robberies out of sight before the people closed in on them. They made such a rumpus in their fighting that the authorities were compelled to take cognizance of the scandal, and then in their panic such a condition of rottenness was uncovered that something had to be done to straighten out the muddle. It was one of those sharp crises which even the "System" is sometimes unexpectedly confronted with, and something had to be done quickly to appease you American people whose $400,000,000 of savings were involved. How did they deal with this terrible situation—their bars all down, Wall Street at a standstill, the people of the country rising in their wrath? Did they go out and select some man of unquestioned probity and character to rehabilitate the devastated institution? No, practically they met at night and next morning it was announced to the world that the whole affair had been properly, fairly and squarely settled, and that the people need have no further fear for the safety of their surplus, for one Thomas F. Ryan had purchased from the discredited Hyde five hundred and two shares of the Equitable stock for two and a half million dollars and that he would see that no one else got away with the hundreds of millions of your savings which the great Equitable company holds. You must know that these five hundred and two shares for which Ryan was willing to pay two and a half million are only entitled, legally, to receive $3,500 per annum in dividends, and are actually worth, at the outside, not more than $100,000. As his representative Mr. Ryan appointed Mr. Paul Morton, the rebate-giving vice-president of the Atchison railroad, to manage the corporation and to see to it that you policy holders are given a square deal. Who are these two men to whom you are asked to trust the support of your wives and children and mothers in case of your death? Personally I know neither of them, and in their individual capacity I am told they are good fellows. Mr. Ryan, they say, is a generous and whole-souled gentleman, who gives back to the people in charity, just as other good fellows do, a mill on each of the dollars he takes from the people in business. Mr. Morton, I read the other day, is a first-class man, and the man who said it said he knew—and his say-so was good enough for me—for he is one of Dame Fortune's pets, one of nature's pickings, the best man in the country to-day, President Roosevelt.

Paul Morton, Ryan and the Atchison

But about Ryan. You may have read what a certain Baltimore banker of high reputation and standing, John Skelton Williams, president of the Seaboard Air Line, has been telling about the manner in which he obtained control of this important railway system for a comparatively small sum of money, and how, since, in defiance of promises and agreements and other pledges, he has held on to it, bleeding it to the extent of $2,000,000 by his clever manipulation. This distinguished Baltimorean points to the new owner of the Equitable as a "conscienceless man whose strongest impulse is to gain money, and his one robust passion to keep it. Patient, emotionless, able, he is an acquiring machine and operates himself for the purpose of getting what others have," says Banker Williams. It was this Ryan who emerged with a railway franchise on Broadway, the basis of the present Metropolitan railway system, from the Jake Sharp boodle scandal in New York. He helped W. C. Whitney acquire the Third avenue railroad after forcing down its stock in the market and cornering its owners. He formed the notorious Tobacco Trust, and also the National Bank of Commerce in New York, and he is now working to secure the building of the New York subway. Indeed, he is one of the very choicest representatives of the genus "frenzied financier" in this country to-day, and in executing the immense projects he has the daring to conceive he is deterred by no scruples.

As for Paul Morton, you of the west know more about his morals and methods than I do, for he ran your Atchison road, and when he was testifying before the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the rebate evil, calmly admitted it was a bad practice, but that he allowed it because he had to do as the Romans did. I don't know myself just what Romans do, but as I said before, President Roosevelt said Morton was all right, and that's good enought for me, but whether the President meant that he was all right enough to run the 600,000 Equitable policyholders' 412 millions as lieutenant for the frenziedest of all frenzied financiers in the home of "frenzied finance," is something I must leave to our good President to answer.

O'Brien's Voting Trusts and Their Great Power

You must have noticed that I have not said anything about the appointment of the three eminently respectable gentlemen who compose Mr. Ryan's voting trust in charge of the Equitable. To quote Mr. Skelton Williams again, "Mr. Ryan has developed the voting trust game to a science. It enables him to work in secret and reach out and take so that those who are deprived, while feeling their loss, cannot quite see who has obtained or how." And Mr. Williams is just now up against one of Mr. Ryan's voting trusts. It is unnecessary to discuss further the parts of Messrs. Cleveland, O'Brien and Westinghouse, except perhaps to say that I believe their intentions are excellent.

These illustrations of "frenzied finance" I have set before you to show in a real way what this inscrutable and deeply scientific business which Wall street tells you is incomprehensible to the untrained mind really amounts to.

Before the eyes of the American people to-day stand forth a little handful of men, risen from their own ranks, who within the last thirty years have grown richer and more powerful than the kings, princes, earls and dukes of those lands where the people are not free and equal. In the ownership of these men is more money than all the rest of the people have gathered, and so potent have they become, through the application of their riches, that they can buy and sell the law-makers and law administrators and the courts of justice which the people had created for the administration of their laws and the defence of their equal rights.

What is more, these same men have so entrenched themselves upon the banks of the channels of commerce that they control the production of all the necessaries and luxuries of the nation so absolutely that when the people buy they must pay the price they fix, just as though these men were the overlords of all the people, as the Czar and Grand Dukes of Russia are lords of the persons of the subjects. What is more, they dominate also the banks and trust companies in which the savings of the people are earning but 3 and 4 per cent, and with these savings they earn for themselves 100 to 1,000 per cent.

In the pride of their powers and possessions these same men grow daily more insolent in flaunting their riches and their superiority to the law of the nation in the face of the people, for they know that by the operation of the financial mechanism they have created the time must come when the ownership of all the wealth of this great land must fall into their hands and the people be reduced to actual servitude.

People Have No Share In Country's Wealth

Thus tempted the people exchanged their real money for these paper tokens of inflated value, and held them in their strong boxes. As the country grew, business naturally increased so that the stocks and bonds earned easily the revenues necessary to pay interest on them, but instead of charging lower rates, the "System" capitalized this prosperity—issued more stocks and bonds, which they sold in exchange for the money the people had meantime been gathering in the banks and trust companies, until during the last thirty years corporation tokens of value have increased from $3,000,000,000 to $60,000,000,000.

From time to time it is the habit of the "System" to artificially create a money stringency and call in all the loans they have made to enable the people to buy all the stocks and bonds they wanted, whereupon the prices of these securities have shrunk tremendously, and the people, growing alarmed, have thrown them overboard or back to the "System" at half what they paid for them. Thus the "system" has had returned to its possession all the stocks and bonds representing the ownership of the great corporations of the country, and at the same time it has the money the people paid for these properties.

You begin to see now something of the process by which your share of the prosperity of the country has been diverted to the pockets of a few men. The processes I have described have been repeated at frequent intervals in the last 30 years—hence Rockefeller's 500 millions and Carnegie's 400 millions, and the Goulds' 150 millions.

Game of Robbery as Played by "System"

Well, some votary of the "system" conceives the idea that there would be great profit in combining all the great steel companies into a trust, and he puts the project before Morgan and his associates, who take hold of the project and borrow the money of their own banks and the "Standard Oil" banks, and buy up the huge plants in Pittsburg, Buffalo and Chicago—all but Carnegie's. For these they pay some 300 millions of dollars. Carnegie looks over the situation and decides that the new trust must have his plants or fail to the ground, and he says to Morgan and his associates: "You need what I have got to round out your scheme, and you must pay me for my mills, on which an option has recently expired for 200 millions, the sum of 300 millions. If you don't, I will block your game of robbing the people, whereas, if you do, your monopoly will be perfect. You can flood the American people with stocks and bonds to any amount, and, what is more, you can charge the consumers of our products any price you care to ask, and so make not only what I bleed you for but hundreds of millions besides."

Morgan and his men paid Carnegie's price. They could do nothing else, for they were on the highway, bent on a gigantic robbery, and, as he said, they required what he had. A new company is organized, and what do you think it was capitalized for? The 300 millions the other plants had cost and Carnegie's 300 millions—600 millions? No, but for $1,500,000,000, bonds, preferred stock and common stock—more than half of all the money of the people of the United States. Thus the United States Steel Company, the greatest trust in the world, began business.

Says Steel Will Drop Again to 50 Cents

To-day the "system's" machinery is filling the papers, the "News Bureaus" and the air with stories of the value of "Steel preferred" and "Steel common" and the two stocks have mounted from their low valuation at which they were purchased and now have a market value of over $533,000,000. There "Standard Oil" and the "system" is keeping them poised and eminent financial touts are busy explaining to the public, to the widows and orphans and trustees what an excellent investment these securities are.

If the public bite and exchange their savings for these stocks, the "system" will have made a profit of several hundred millions and later will repeat the process, for, take my word for it, United States Steel will again drop to fifty cents on the dollar or lower.

This particular instance is one of the most glaring examples of the "system's" methods of gathering in your savings, and when you look over the several immense profits represented in this steel transaction alone, you will begin to grasp where some more of your share of the country's prosperity has gone to.

Let me describe to you a specific transaction which illustrates how this sort of thing is done. Not so long ago the New York Life Insurance Company came out with a bold proclamation announcing that in order to comply with the regulations of the German Empire, which forbade insurance companies doing business within its borders from carrying stock investments, it would dispose of its hundreds of millions of holdings in this class of securities and purchase bonds instead. This sounded very fine and conservative, though some of the well-posted men in the other companies who knew the opportunities for graft connected with such a transaction, called it a joke. Any way, the announcement sounded like a good policy to the American people, and they applauded President McCall for his courage in making so radical a move in the safe direction. Now, among the stock holdings of President McCall's company had been some $5,000,000 of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy stock, the market value of which was $76 per share.

What Are the American People Going to Do?

I have set before you an exposition of the guile by which you have been deprived of the advantages of our national prosperity. You must realize from what I have told you that through defects in our system of finance individuals have appropriated your share of our country's great advance in wealth. You must see that you have profited nothing by the growth of your country, by the development of its resources, by the increase of its population. In spite of the vast demand for those articles and products which are your luxuries and your necessities, with few exceptions, you are paying as much or more for them to-day than thirty years ago. The territories traversed by your original railways have changed from cattle pastures to wheat farms, passengers travel by the thousands and freight is carried by the million tons where a half full coach and three carloads of goods represented great business. The revenues of these properties have swelled into millions, and their owners' palaces line the Hudson and Fifth avenue. But what has this increment availed you—you Kansans? Are your rates less except through competition? Or have you great holdings of these stocks and bonds which grew in value because hundreds of thousands of you used these railroads? Is it not actually true that instead of reaping advantages and revenues from the development of your lands that you are to-day paying interest to your railroads and your other great corporations on your own prosperity, which they have capitalized?

What are you going to do about it? You know that the economic condition which allows the few to possess all and the many are left with nothing must be ended. If it is not, slavery is the alternative. How shall it be ended? By your ballots? What are ballots against dollars, and the "system" has unlimited dollars.

With $5,000,000 I saw Rogers rob the able, fearless, honest, but-all-wrong-on-the-money-question, William Jennings Bryan out of the presidency of the United States in 1896. Do you imagine he would shrink from repeating the operation in 1908 if he feared that the man you nominated would upset his control?

To-day at the helm of your affairs is an able and fearless American, bold to conceive and strong to execute. To all of you he is a hero, and you are behind him, ready to back up his course wherever he sees fit to go. President Roosevelt knows it and to-day no man in the country is more keenly aware of the necessity of curbing the corporate despotism under which we live—but what can President Roosevelt do? I hate to say it, but he is as helpless in the "system's" net as a bull in a balloon. Like Gulliver in Lilliputia, he is bound by 1,000 threads—Congress, the Senate, the party's interests, and gratitude, and all the intangible influences which the great money power can weave round any individual. How brave and quick the President is to do! A wrong is called to his attention, a law must needs be passed—the rebate evil must be curbed, and he sends messages to Congress demanding instant action. What happens? Congress temporizes, the Senate snubs him, and the "system" snickers.

The surest, safest and most natural process of restitution is the application of the "System's" own methods to the "System." If we find a Rockefeller possessed of 500 millions, we shall first investigate how he obtained so much money, and if he gained it legally, he must never be molested in its ownership, for it would be dastardly if the American people took from any one of themselves that which they had themselves given him, for that is what obtaining property legally really amounts to in America. But the ownership of so large a sum by one man is proof positive that it was not obtained legally, therefore we should discover exactly by what methods of squeezing, filching and plundering it was got together, and then take him and his 500 millions back over the route of his raid, compelling him to drop the booty at each twist of the road. There would be righteous retribution in despoiling the robber by means of the very machine he devised for your undoing.

How to Fight the War Against System

The first step is for the American people to divorce themselves from the "System" and sell every share of stock and every bond they hold back to the frenzied financiers at present inflated prices.

Take the money thus realized and place it in banks and trust companies, or, better still, in government, State and municipal bonds. In selecting banks and trust companies steer clear, to the best of your ability, of those institutions that are linked up with the "system." When you all have done this you have cut the foundation from under the inflated price structure the "system" is maintaining and a collapse is inevitable. When the value of securities declines to a given point the "system" must throw over the stocks and bonds it is carrying, for, bear in mind, frenzied financiers never own outright the stocks and bonds that stand in their names. A financier worth $20,000,000 will be found owning $60,000,000 of stock, borrowing the $40,000,000 from the funds of the people in the banks. When the "system" sells, the public alone will be able to buy. Then the "system" will be no more. There is my simple plan: to load up the "system" with the stocks and bonds distributed among the people in addition to the stocks and bonds it owns itself. Then deprive it of the money of the people. Result—the artificial price structure collapses, the stocks and bonds of railways and manufactures and gas companies all drop to the real cost or values of the properties they represent. Then the people, the money owners, purchase the stocks and bonds, and having only to pay interest on their real values, can reduce rates of fares and freight and prices generally and the revolution will then be complete.

Calls on Kansas to Step Into the Breach

Men and women of Kansas, the other day you, in keeping with your traditions and your past, seeing the situation of the American people and recognizing that someone must step from the ranks to the firing line and cry to the "system," "Halt! You can go no farther!" threw yourselves into the breach. Knowing that someone must risk fortune and perhaps life in pointing the way to free these American people, you, led by your great and fearless Governor, hurled yourselves against the powerfully poised bayonets and the stinkpots of the Standard Oil and the "system," and to-day the eyes of the entire world are upon you.

It is not only your own interests which are at stake, your great oil industry, your beef, your corn, wheat, all of which are absolutely at the mercy of this gigantic power through its control of the railroads and banking system of the country—not only your interests which are at stake in this battle, but the interests of the whole American people. They are falling into line, State after State and city after city, and as fearlessly and as bravely as you, they are following you to the battle, but you cannot alter or change the hard, cold fact an iota, that upon you depends the battle.

Every eye in America is focused on the banner of Kansas, for every man, woman and child knows it has gone forth to battle with this monster which up to now has never met defeat, and if your banner goes down and is trailed in the dust—never mind whether it be by treachery, corruption or the brutal force of dollars—the American people will surely cry as one man "What use for us to try where bleeding, fearless Kansas failed?"

There are but one people, and they are Americans. The election of Theodore Roosevelt has just proved it, and he the honest, he the brave and grand, has a great, strong right hand upon the rudder of state, while in his left he holds the sword of justice, as he in a voice which pierces the ears of all the world rings out, "A square deal for all!" Just then Opportunity knocks, and I implore you, by all the traditions of the past, in behalf of the suffering of the present, and for the sake of unborn generations, answer the knock, open the door and show the whole world that Kansas, if necessary, will again earn, and doubly earn, her name of "Bleeding Kansas."

LAWSON HURT BY JEROME'S ATTACK

Kansas City, Mo., July 8.—"It is tough that a man like Jerome—one whom I believe to be, in his own mind, perfectly honest—should feel called upon to attack me as he did last night. My opinion of him has not been lowered; I still believe he is honest. But it is tough, just the same."

Thomas W. Lawson thus summarized his conclusions to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter as to the duel he had with the redoubtable New York District Attorney last night—in which no one who heard the colloquy thinks Lawson came out second best.

"Mr. Jerome is a popular man," said Mr. Lawson. "He is popular here as everywhere. I seem to have some friends. At an opportune time for action both of us could accomplish much. Yet I have to stop to reply to his attack. If he was a tool of the system I should laugh at his words. It is knowing he is honest that hurts. That is the tough part of the game."

Mr. Jerome left for New York at about the same time that Mr. Lawson left for Ottawa. Previous to leaving he strolled about the corridors at the Baltimore Hotel. He was well-groomed, cordial and smiling—but he could not be induced to say a word about Mr. Lawson or their dinner table controversy.

"I covered it all, I think, in what I told you last night after the dinner," he said.

After the dinner he had said this: "He who gives, must take. I invited Mr. Lawson's attack. I have nothing to say after having received it."

"Did you intend to be taken seriously in what you said about Mr. Lawson?" he was asked. "You know some of the people think you were just giving him a Gridiron Club reception."

"I can say this," replied Mr. Jerome. "I like Kansas City; I like its people; and I think that any abuse of the Summer weather here is a libel."

Mr. Lawson was not so reticent. As he sat at his desk in the "Haslemere," where he was at work at 5:30 o'clock, although he had not gotten to bed until 2, he was plainly hurt at the district attorney's words and attitude.

"Mr. Jerome didn't do right by me," he said. "Every word Mr. Ridgway spoke about me came, I believe, direct from his heart. And to think the attack should come from such a man as Jerome! I was hurt by it, deeply hurt.

"I can't explain how it could have come about that a man like Jerome, whom we all know to be perfectly honest, one who is respected and bears a national reputation as a result of his accomplishments, should attack me. I know—everybody knows—that he tried to make a monkey out of me. But why? We are both united in a way by our single cause—the fight against corruption.

"I know Jerome, I have studied his character. He did not plan his attack. No, like everything else he has done, this attack came into his mind on the spur of the moment. Had it been anyone else except Jerome, from a hireling or a man of different type, I would have laughed at him.

"But when an honest man—and Jerome is constant and conscientious—crosses my path purposely, I let drive at him, I let drive and ask his name and business afterward. My intention in my reply last night was to get back at him, and I hope that in the eyes of the public that I accomplished it.

"I came out here single-handed. I am not surrounded by detectives, Secret Service men, nor have I any power behind me. I will fight my battles alone and here I will, for the good of the people. I will go to the remotest spot in any country where Americans live if I can do the people good, and if I can't take care of myself I will willingly pay the toll. If Jerome or any other man wishes to battle with me, let him begin. I will take him on. I know that I am fighting for a good cause and I have the people back of me."

STEALS AN AUTO FOR HONEYMOON

Cincinnati, July 8.—After four days of a honeymoon as strenuous as was ever allotted to any knight, William Schultz, of Pleasant Ridge, wearer of a medal for bravery, is in jail charged with burglary.

Out in Madisonville his bride of four days is just recovering her breath, after two days of adventures with the hero, and is, incidentally, weeping for an occurrence which may deprive her of a husband for some time.

Schultz is charged with stealing an automobile for a honeymoon trip, hurting pedestrians and violating speed ordinances.

BAIL IS REFUSED GAYNOR AND GREENE

Montreal, Que., July 8.—An application for bail for Messrs. Gaynor and Greene was refused to-day by Judge Ouimet of the court of King's Bench.

BACHELOR OF 74 TO WED; BRIDE 80

Worcester, July 8.—Samuel A. Wesson, aged seventy-four, has gone to St. Johnsbury, Vt., to wed Mrs. Mary Roberts, aged eighty. Always a bachelor, Mr. Wesson says he can tell a lot of younger men how to keep young. He is a native of Shrewsbury and has lived in Worcester fifty years. He has known Mrs. Roberts about a half century, but his courting did not begin until three years ago. Unlike the bridegroom-to-be, Mrs. Roberts has been previously married. Three husbands have helped to make life smooth for her.

LITTLE MISS KANG CHATS ABOUT HER AMBITIONS.

To work for the [illegible] of China and Chinese women is the [illegible] which fills the [illegible] of dainty Miss Kang Tung Pih, daughter of the famous Kang Yu Wei, now visiting in Boston.

"I have much work to do. I have much to learn," said Miss Kang, raising her great black eyes, and clasping her taper jeweled fingers in ecstasy. "I am going to study in America and then go back to my country to teach the Chinese women. I want them to learn and grow and be like their American sisters, clever and independent."

It will take this enthusiastic young Chinese girl five years in which to prepare for the beginning of the [illegible] task she has set herself. For two years she has been a pupil at a private school in Hartford. She has traveled during the vacations, she has kept her eyes and ears open, her mind alert and has been learning every minute of the time. In the Fall she will go to Barnard College to take the regular course.

"And after that, what?" she was asked.

Will Go in for Politics.

"Politics," she said quite clearly and positively. "I am going to study politics. I want to know the government and the political methods of America and every other country. I believe women should go into politics to be helpful. Do you think so?"

"They are taxed," she pronounced it with the long [illegible], "and if they are taxed they should be represented. That is what you say is right. 'No taxation without representation.'

"Do you not believe a woman should vote? If she is taxed, why should she not vote? She gives her money and so she should have a word in the government."

"And you are going to teach the Chinese women to vote?" she shrugged her slender shoulders and smiled.

"No, no," she said, "not at once. They cannot vote now, not right away. They must learn. Very many years women have been quiet, submissive in China. They must learn a great deal before they [illegible] independent and act.

"There are over 100,000,000 women in China. Just imagine what [illegible] would mean, if they [illegible] as independent as the Dowager Empress."

American Woman Her Model.

Miss Kang takes the American woman for a model. She says that women in America have a better time than any other women in the world.

"They are more equal with the men," is the way she puts it, and then "this with a smile of admiration. "And they are very smart."

Miss Kang's honorable father, Kang Yu Wei, to whom all Boston Chinese have been paying homage since his arrival, is the greatest benefactor the Chinese women have ever known.

It was Kang Yu Wei who first formed the association which had [illegible] object the natural growth of the female foot in China. In this work he had the sympathetic aid of his [illegible] daughter Kang Tung Mea. [illegible] Chinese girl [illegible] feet.

"It is only the older women who have the little feet," said Miss Kang. "It was so cruel, so dreadful. Now they know better. It has changed [illegible] for Chinese women."

"China is quite changed. It grows better all the time," [illegible] young woman; [illegible] has only just begun.

"I want to work in two ways [illegible] the women and through the [illegible] women are the mothers [illegible] children. The [illegible] will grow up progressive. They will be the [illegible] women of China. Then China will be quite changed."

Glad That Girls Marry Later.

In the quaintest of [illegible] she explained her pleasure that the girls of China are not marrying at the extremely youthful age which was formerly deemed proper. Often nowadays a Chinese girl is not married until she is twenty or twenty-one years old.

"It is better," said Miss Kang. "It is like young fruit, you pick it too early, it is not good, it is sour. But wait till it grows and then it ripens and is sweet."

Regarding the restriction of Chinese immigration into America she considers our laws unjust.

"They let every other people, even the lowest classes of every nation in. Only the Chinese are barred. Even students and travelers, people of high family and wealth, it matters not, all must suffer."

Although this is not her first visit to Boston, Miss Kang enjoys the city immensely. She has visited Cambridge, and she has reveled in the beauties of the Art Museum.

Indeed she is herself a clever artist, drawing in pen and ink and painting in water colors.

In appearance she is a most attractive [illegible] begin to show [illegible] [illegible] grows merry or [illegible]

Good Knowledge of English.

[illegible] at [illegible] in Canton and two years in America have given her an excellent knowledge of the language which she speaks with a funny little [illegible] accent which is irresistible.

Her glossy black hair is pompadoured and tied at her neck with a wide pale blue ribbon.

On one wrist was a Chinese charm bracelet, on the other a gold chain.

Two rings, one of opals, the other of turquoise, gleamed on her exquisitely slender fingers. And her feet have never known the misery and torture of a bandage.

"See," she said, letting a dainty slippered toe emerge from beneath the fluffery of her skirt, "they are quite beeg."

She must wear a No. 3 shoe; so no one can accuse her of having "beeg" feet in America.

EQUITABLE ON CLEVELAND'S SHOULDERS.

New Management [illegible] Society, Stung by Criticism, Now Shifts the Responsibility on the Former President

BELIEVE PUBLIC HAS CONFIDENCE IN HIM

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 8.—[illegible] that has been heaped upon [illegible] because of the deal by which Thomas F. Ryan became possessed of control of Hyde stock and the $413,000,000 of assets that belong to the policy holders, the new management of the Equitable Life Assurance Society is each day shifting the responsibility of control upon the shoulders of Grover Cleveland.

The Cleveland exploitation is due to the fact that the public is [illegible] to have confidence in him and the Ryan-Morton Wall Street clique that has come into control of the cash belonging to the 600,000 policy holders by depositing $2,500,000 for 502 shares of stock that can never legitimately pay more than seven per cent. annually, hope that the reputation of Mr Cleveland will save their craft.

It leaked out to-day that, notwithstanding the fact that the [illegible] are paying Paul Morton $75,000 a year as chairman of the board, Grover Cleveland is the actual head of the society, and that to him the army of policyholders must look for relief.

Cleveland Suggests Reforms.

"Mr. Cleveland is taking a much greater interest in the affairs of the Equitable Society than we were led to believe he would," said an associate of Mr Ryan today. "He is looking personally into the history of the past management, and has suggested many of the reforms that have been inaugurated."

It was declared that Cleveland, and not Morton, caused the examination of Equitable books now being made by expert accountants. Mr Cleveland, it is said, insisted upon this because he was not satisfied with the reports of the Frick Committee and the Superintendent of Insurance.

He feared one might have been colored by personal bias and the other tinctured by political influence. It was he, it is said, who ordered the salaries of Depew and Hill cut off and demanded the resignation of William H. McIntyre, the close friend and adviser of Hyde. This was not contemplated under the transfer.

Having accomplished these reforms Mr Cleveland, it is said, is bent upon stirring things up much more.

He is suspicious of the Republican State administration, and fears that in some way men who ought to be punished will escape. Hence he has enlisted the services of Wayne MacVeagh, his former Attorney-General, to help Attorney-General Mayer and District Attorney Jerome in prospective prosecution.

Mr MacVeagh has conveyed to Mr. Jerome the information that he stands by ready to take a hand in any prosecution. He will study the testimony presented by Hendricks and start trouble for any guilty one who may escape Jerome or Mayer.

Testimony Finished.

The belated testimony taken during the Hendricks investigation, which should have been in the hands of the District Attorney and the Attorney-General two weeks [illegible] has at last been finished by Mr. [illegible] stenographers. [illegible] Mr. Jerome [illegible] at his office yesterday [illegible] Monday [illegible] None of the [illegible] Mr. Jerome's office would break [illegible] of the [illegible] document which [illegible] that will send several [illegible]

[illegible] was sent to his office [illegible] and it is expected [illegible] he will be [illegible] Monday to confer with the District Attorney.

Friends of Thomas F. Ryan deny the insinuation that Mr MacVeagh has [illegible] injected into the case [illegible] the attitude of [illegible] that [illegible] Mr. Ryan would be apprised [illegible] in advance.

Superintendent Herbert West of the Revere Beach Reservation was asked if he knew of the marriage of his son.

"I have nothing whatever to say about it," he answered.

"Were you aware that he had gone to Providence [illegible]?"

"I don't care to say anything about it."

"Do you know your son's bride?"

"I know nothing about the young woman except that she lives in Brighton, where I don't know."

Warren West is twenty-two years of age and is a [illegible]. He made his home with his father at [illegible] Revere.

According to what was understood by the officials of Providence City Hall, the couple met with opposition from their parents because they were so young and decided not to wait any longer.

BANDIT LEADS IN SAN DOMINGO FUSS

Washington, July 8.—Neither the State nor Navy Departments have received any official notice regarding an alleged recent outbreak in Santo Domingo, reported in private dispatches to New York. Barahuna, the scene of the alleged fight, is a small place without any political importance.

On July 1 a bandit, with some twenty or thirty followers, raised a disturbance there which was suppressed by the Dominican troops after one or two men had been killed and the rest put to flight. The United States cruiser Des Moines was sent to the place, but returned to Santo Domingo City two days later. It is thought that this skirmish is the foundation for the present rumors of an "important" engagement.

Mr. Knott Denies Ever Making Love to Her, and Tells How He Came to Marry Miss Elizabeth Pennell, on July 6

Special to the Sunday American.

Attleboro, July 8.—Within forty-eight hours after he had taken a bride, Thomas Knott, seventy-three years old, was sued for $10,000 in an action for breach of promise by Mrs. Mary F[illegible] Dodd, of No. 298 Park street. Mr. Knott married Mrs. Elizabeth Pennell on July 6. He lives at No. 300 Park street and is wealthy.

The plaintiff in this suit is forty-nine years old and has three children. Immediately after she learned that Mr. Knott had married some one else, she decided to bring suit. This suit was filed this afternoon, she charging that the aged man had plighted his troth with her several weeks ago.

The marriage ceremony between Mr. Knott and Mrs. Pennell was performed by the Rev. J. J. Tryon of the Episcopal Church in the rectory.

Mrs. Dodd said to a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN this afternoon:

"Told Me He Loved Me."

"I have known Mr. Knott for six years and he has always told me he loved me. Two years ago his wife died. During her illness I did a great part of the housework and all his washing. After his wife died he was taken sick with pneumonia and I attended him during his illness.

"For the past two years I have been going to his house every morning for milk. While I was with him he would profess his love for me and tell me that sometime I would be his wife. In that way I got so that I loved him. Last Easter Sunday he asked me if I would be his wife and I told him 'Yes.' Then he said: 'We won't get married right away, but will wait for a while.' He called my children to him one day and said: 'Be good children and mind your mama and some day I will be your papa.'

"About two weeks ago a woman came to his house and began to put everything in order. The next thing I heard was that on July 6 he and this woman were married. I felt like killing myself and sat down and cried for several hours. My son-in-law advised me to see a lawyer and I did so."

"Never Made Love to Her."

Mr. Knott said: "I never made love to Mrs. Dodd and never had any intention of marrying her. In the first place she has too many children for me to take care of at my age.

"I never called to see her at her home, although she came to see me every day. I met Mrs. Pennell about four months ago when she was working in my house. I wanted a companion and asked her if she would be my wife, and now we are both happy."

Acting Chief Mullen and Owners of Burned Property Believe Blaze Was Incendiary.

In the pile of still smoking ruins of the Lamb and Leatherbee lumber yards on Albany street inspectors connected with the fire inspection department of the State police are searching for the cause of the $300,000 fire in which one life was lost.

Up to a late hour last night they had found nothing. The ruins were still hot, although heavy streams played on them constantly. They were unable to definitely locate the origin of the blaze.

There is a strong suspicion among the owners of the yards that the fire was the work of the incendiary who on several previous occasions has set blazes in the lumber yards. Acting Chief Mullen, who came with the first pieces of apparatus, declares that the fire was burning in three places. To the fire chief it has every appearance of having been deliberately set.

May Be Careless Smoker.

Chief Inspector Rice and Inspector Crittendon of the State police have gone over the ground where the condition of the ruins permitted, but have been unable to decide the cause. They believe that if it was not of incendiary origin, a workman's pipe, carelessly laid down, may have been responsible.

The fire inspectors have [illegible] every one connected with both places who was at the scene within an hour before the fire started. They have [illegible] several men who declare that a few minutes before 6 o'clock, or a little over half an hour before the fire was discovered, the lumber yards were visited and nothing suspicious seen.

When the fire first came to the notice of people across the street it burst up with a roar and seemed to be in several places. It was generally agreed by the first men on the scene that the fire must have started in the rear of the Leatherbee Company's wharf.

Two Horses Saved.

It spread rapidly. In the Lamb stable there were thirteen horses. Eleven of them perished in their stalls on the second floor. Two broke their halters and escaped away from the blaze to the harness room, where they poked their heads out of the window and mutely appealed for assistance from the firemen. The firemen carried pails of water to them that they might not choke.

The side of the building where they stood was kept drenched with water, and was the only portion of the building saved. After over twelve hours of torture the two were taken out in slings and carried to the hospital, where it is said that, despite their burns, they will recover.

Andrew Bossett, a watchman employed by the Leatherbee Company for a quarter of a century, who lost his life when he tried to open the gates that the firemen might have easy entrance, was accustomed to make his round of the yards at 6 o'clock. It is believed that he did so, for at the time the fire was discovered he was sweeping out the office. Given warning by the shouts, he seized his keys and rushed into the yard. His body was found under a pile of lumber, where he had evidently crawled for protection from the heat.

Disastrous Fire Prevented.

Acting Fire Chief Mullen, who is in charge of the department while Chief Cheswell is on his vacation, believes that Boston was saved from an exceedingly disastrous fire. In a talk with a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter yesterday the chief said:

"When we arrived on the scene the entire [illegible] was one solid sheet of flame, and, had it not been for the prompt work of the department in confining the fire to a small area, Boston would probably have had one of the most disastrous fires in its history.

"The fire may possibly have been set, as it followed so closely after the blaze in the refrigerator plant of F. C. Whitman & Co., at No. 670 Harrison avenue, that it certainly had a suspicious look to me. The Albany street blaze was in a direct air line from the Harrison avenue fire and this fact led me to believe that the two fires might have been set by the same hand.

"We had just left the Harrison avenue fire and the department, with the exception of a chemical line, was on the way back to the houses. We had been gone barely three minutes when we got the alarm from the Albany street box. I immediately turned back and when I saw the conditions I ordered a third alarm sent in.

State Police at Work.

"The State police are now working on the case, as they received our report on the fire the first thing Saturday morning."

Christopher Tilte, stable man on the Lamb property, left at 6.15 o'clock and he declared that there were no signs of fire at that time. B. F. Portunato of the Leatherbee Company, was about the yard at 5 o'clock and saw no signs of fire or smoke.

Frank Barry, foreman for the J. A. Bradford Coal Company of Albany street, was one of the first men on the scene and also the last man to see Watchman Bossett alive. Barry lives on Albany street on the Bradford property and formerly worked for the Leatherbee Company. Barry said to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter:

How Bossett Died.

"Night Watchman Bossett had evidently been sweeping up the office of the Leatherbee company, as was his custom, and first knew of the fire through the shouting. He had just come out of the office door when I reached there and he was much excited.

"Just at that moment John Haggerty, a teamster who was passing, yelled to us to open the driveway doors so the firemen could have free entrance. We opened the south driveway and I started down toward the wharf to open the gate at the lower end. At the same time Bossett said: 'I will go through the passageway and open the other gate.'

"He went through the passageway and I said to him: 'The smoke is getting thick, better not go.' I grabbed at his coat, but he was gone. I went down the driveway, when suddenly the smoke became so stifling that I had to turn back. As I reached the passageway I shouted to Bossett, asking him to come back. All I heard was a few groans.

"I knew that he was in trouble. I dropped on my hands and knees and started groping along the passageway, but the smoke was so dense that I simply had to give it up and make my way to the street."

Says It Started in Lamb's.

The last man to leave the Leatherbee yard was head clerk Benjamin F. Portunato. That was at 6.15 o'clock and there was absolutely no sign of fire nor smell of smoke when he left, he says.

"I left the office at 6.15 o'clock, bidding Watchman Bossett good night as I left. He was alone and had started to sweep the office. I went down to Union Park street for my supper and when I came [illegible] 7 o'clock I noticed the smoke and rushed back to the office. The flames, as I entered our driveway, were over in the middle of Lamb's lumber and I am sure there was no fire at first in our yards."

VANDERBILTS ARE TO GIVE PICNIC TO 400 CHILDREN.

Annual Outing to Pupils of Newport Sunday School to Take Place Next Tuesday at Southwicke Grove, R. I.

Special to the Sunday American.

Newport, R. I., July 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt will give their annual picnic to the four hundred Sunday School children of the Thames Street Methodist Church Tuesday. The Vanderbilts have returned earlier than usual from Ardsley on the Hudson for this especial purpose.

They will meet the children at Washington square and see that every young[illegible] is safely aboard the special trolleys. Then Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt will follow the [illegible].

For four years the Vanderbilts have given this outing to the Thames Street Methodist Sunday School.

One of the first things Mrs. Vanderbilt did was to telephone Captain F. H. Garrett of the Newport police, who is also a trustee of the church, and tell him to go ahead with picnic arrangements.

Leaving Washington square in their special trolleys, the children will go to Bristol Ferry and board a steamer for a sail across the bay to Bristol, where the great yacht building yards of the Herreshoffs [illegible]. Returning from Bristol to the ferry the children will ride in the cars to Southwicke Grove [illegible].

There will be a band [illegible] luncheon, a Maypole dance, sports and ice cream and lemonade. The children will sing patriotic songs, with a string orchestra for music. And, if they follow the custom of previous picnics, every boy and girl will give three sincere and hearty cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt when the latter arrive at the grove to join in the fun.

NEW LABOR BODY IS NOT TO JOIN THE SOCIALISTS.

Chicago, July 8.—With the election of officers of the new organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World, today, Eugene V. Debs and his coterie of fellow spirits saw the end of their hope of an affiliation of the order with the Socialists. The election was a complete victory for the Western clique, under the leadership of David Coates, and the defeat of Debs and Daniel DeLeon, representing the Socialist party, was crushing.

The officers elected: President, C. O. Sherman, Chicago; secretary-treasurer, William E. Trautman, New York; Charles Moyer, Frank McCabe, Charles Kirkpatrick, F. W. Cronin and John Reardon, members of the provincial executive committee.

The newly elected president, in his speech of acceptance, voiced the sentiments of the convention when he said:

"It is distinctly understood in the manifesto issued some months ago and in the preamble of our adopted constitution that there shall be no affiliations with political organizations, and while I am president this law shall be adhered to to the letter."

TWENTIETH CENTURY LIMITED WRECKED BY OPERATOR?

New and Startling Evidence by the Flyer's Fireman Is Directly Opposite to What Officials Tried to Prove

Cleveland, O., July 8.—A statement, believed by the authorities to be of supreme importance in the investigation of the Lake Shore Twentieth Century Limited wreck at Mentor, Ohio, is given by Fireman A. P. Gorham, of the flyer. Gorham declared in an affidavit that the limited passed a freight train near the depot at Wickliffe. Throughout the inquest at Painesville last week, it was the endeavor of the county attorney to show that a freight train was on its way from Willoughby to Mentor when the flyer passed.

In case there was such a freight it was argued that Operator Miner, at Mentor, opened the switch at the station in expectation of its coming. It was on this open switch that the flyer was wrecked.

Every effort was made by the railroad officials present to prove that such a freight train was on the line at that time and that it was west of Wickliffe several miles away when the flyer passed.

The train dispatcher from Buffalo testified that the freight reached Wickliffe after the flyer. [illegible] gave evidence to the same effect, and [illegible] exhibited [illegible] showing that the train was at Willoughby when the limited went by.

Operator Styles, at Wickliffe, however, testified that his train sheet had been changed. Afterwards he said he made the change himself on account of an error. An assistant dispatcher from Buffalo said that to the best of his recollection, the freight passed Wickliffe ahead of the flyer, the train sheet to the contrary notwithstanding.

Evidence was also elicited that local records of a freight at Wickliffe and at Willoughby were mysteriously missing.

STRUCK BY TRAIN, FATALLY INJURED

New York, July 8.—Jacob H. Reuben, forty-two years old, a leather merchant of 227 State street, New Haven, Conn., was struck by a train in the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad yards in the Bronx today and was probably fatally injured. Reuben jumped off the train and was struck by an express. His skull was fractured. He was taken to Lebanon Hospital.

COTTON REPORT FRAUD; HOLMES IS OUSTED.

Man Who Gave Out Information from Government Secret Documents to the Brokers Is to Escape Punishment

NO LAW FOUND TO COVER THE OFFENCE

Place in Statistics Bureau to Be Filled by Victor H. Olmstead, Now Chief of Division of Crop Reports

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Washington, July 8.—Following the dismissal of Associate Statistician Edwin S. Holmes of the Department of Agriculture by Secretary Wilson for accepting a bribe of $5,000 from L. C. Van Riper, a New York broker, in return for which Holmes gave the secret figures of the national crop report ahead of their official announcement, the announcement to-day that Victor H. Olmstead had been appointed to fill the vacancy.

Secretary Wilson declared to-day that further leaks of a similar nature would be impossible. He had a conference, too, with the idea of prosecuting Holmes, but found that he [illegible] there is no law covering the offence. Meanwhile Holmes leaves the service with a great fortune, partly from selling advance information of the government cotton report and partly by manipulating the market himself.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson says in his report:

Gave Advance Information.

"It has been found that Edwin S. Holmes communicated advance information to L. C. Van Riper, a New York broker, and M. Haas of New York, who acted as a go-between in conveying information from Holmes to other New York brokers, including Theodore Price.

"There will be no more opportunity for advance information on reports on speculative crops. In the report of the Secret Service operative, Edwin S. Holmes, for [illegible] associate statistician, is the [illegible] He is dismissed from the service of the department."

The charges that brought about Holmes's dismissal were made by Richard Cheatham. Victor H. Olmstead, who succeeds Holmes, for some time past has held the position of chief of division of domestic crop reports in the Bureau of Statistics, and prior to that was assistant statistician of the department. He was also assistant director of the census in Cuba and in the Philippines immediately following the Spanish war.

Price Denies Connection.

New York, July 8.—Theodore Price, who is mentioned in the report of Secretary of Agriculture Wilson as one of the cotton brokers who obtained advance information from Statistician Holmes, declared: "I [illegible] knowledge [illegible] L. C. Van Riper or M. Haas [illegible] other men," he said.

"I do not believe Secretary Wilson made any such statement."

His attorney, Mr. Evans, supplemented this by saying:

"I think there must be some error. If Mr. Price has been mentioned in the way the despatches [illegible]."

[illegible] Price [illegible] probably has been the biggest man in the cotton market since the Civil War. As senior partner of Price, McCormick & Co., he was king of the pit. His firm failed some years ago for $1,000,000. Since then he has worked to pay off the obligations of the bankrupt firm, and he succeeded.

Adams thought it was about time that the couple left the house. They told him they would stay for the night and Saturday would see about getting other quarters.

The remarks of the woman set Adams to thinking about the quantity of jewelry which he had seen in their possession. Riley had explained it by saying that he was a jewelry salesman. Adams determined that the police should investigate. He [illegible] to Captain Wescott, who sent for Detectives [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] quarters. The [illegible] the [illegible] they started in search of the couple [illegible] found them on Broadway.

Riley says he is [illegible] years of age and his wife is two years older.

The jewels recovered by the police are [illegible] kinds. They include somewhere [illegible] 200 rings of [illegible], some [illegible] stones. Between 500 and 600 unset stones [illegible] two dozen [illegible] and neck[illegible] [illegible] jewelry.

Have Been in Boston a Week.

The man and the woman put in an appearance at Mr. Adams's house a week ago last Friday and had no baggage save the sample cases. Riley carried the large one and his wife the others. They asked for a room, the young man saying that he was [illegible] jewelry and wanted a quiet place where he would feel safe.

Adams let them have the room, and on Monday they appeared in complete new [illegible]. They bothered no one in the house, [illegible] much to themselves and their [illegible] were regular. They went out every evening about 9 o'clock, the man generally carrying one of the sample cases.

They visited many houses in South Boston and offered [illegible] jewelry for sale [illegible] price for such a ring [illegible] Riley explained the [illegible] introducing our goods here.

They found many customers. After selling considerable jewelry they generally [illegible] much of the money at South Boston dry goods and clothing stores.

Riley's father formerly lived in Boston, but moved to New York about twenty-five years ago. The police searched the room and found a number of pawn tickets which indicated that some jewelry had been pawned in New York. They also found a revolver and a box of cartridges.

An unfinished letter on the table read:

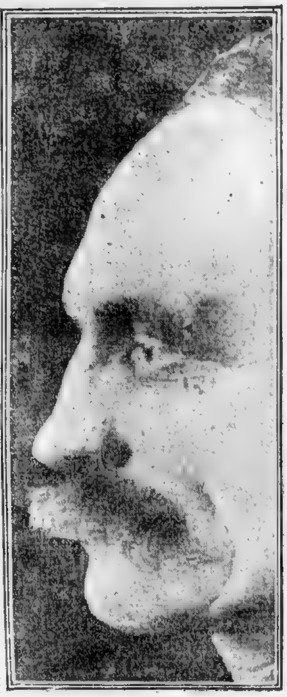
WAS PARK VICTIM SLAIN, OR DID HE COMMIT SUICIDE?



DO YOU KNOW A MAN WHO LOOKS LIKE THIS ONE? IF SO YOU MAY SOLVE NORTH END DEATH CASE

This is a picture of John Lantry, whose friends identified the body of the man found dead at North End Park as that of Lantry, although he was alive and at work. The dead man and the living look enough alike to be twins.

Was the unknown man who was found dead at North End Park with his throat fearfully gashed, a victim of murder or of suicide? And what is his name?

The mystery as to his identity and the exact manner of his death only deepens after active investigation. His name, his home, his occupation, if he had any, are not yet established. Medical Examiner Francis A. Harris says the man killed himself. He thinks the man tried to cut his throat and then drowned himself. On the other hand Lifeguard Daniel Foley, who first found the body, sticks to his opinion that the man was murdered. He thinks that the cuts, the distorted features and the general appearance of the body indicate foul play.

"I am sure he was murdered," said Foley yesterday, "and the rest of the park employes think so, too."

The "bullet" story, by the way, is positively discredited. Medical Examiner Harris says his autopsy revealed no bullet in the man's body, nor any signs of one.

Gashes in the Throat.

Despite the finding of the Medical Examiner many people agree with Lifeguard Foley that the unfortunate man was murdered and that his body was cast into the water. The hideous gashes in the throat are [illegible] as [illegible] signs of foul play.

Meanwhile the body is at Briggs's [illegible] and Sergeant Nagle and Patrolman O'Brien of Hanover street station are trying to find someone who can identify it.

"The head and half his body were under the runway [illegible] with the arms [illegible] There [illegible] features were [illegible] distorted and the face was purple, as though he had struggled fiercely and died in great agony. The largest cut was four inches long, extending from the left ear across the throat to the Adam's apple. The Adam's apple itself was crushed as though it had been subjected to great force. The other two cuts were under the long one. One eye was [illegible] the other had been hit with something [illegible] it had almost been torn from the socket.

Pocket Inside Out.

"His white shirt-front was blood spattered, and fresh blood dripped down on it from the cuts as I turned the body over. One of the trousers pockets was inside out.

"This man didn't jump from or get thrown from our pier at the park. If he had he would have been carried down [illegible] He [illegible] landed in the water from Craigie bridge, or one of the railroad bridges, or in that vicinity, and was carried down in here as driftwood is by the Charles River current.

"Everything indicates foul play. This man was not a suicide, nor was he accidentally drowned [illegible] was slashed. Then he was thrown [illegible] water. During my three years here I have seen many drowned people, but this was not a drowning case."

"Suicide," Says Medical Examiner.

But Medical Examiner Harris said yesterday:

"In the first place this talk of a bullet is bosh. There wasn't any bullet. And this was a simple case of suicide. There [illegible] The man tried to [illegible] then jumped overboard [illegible]

"There were no marks or bruises to indicate assault. The cuts on the neck were not serious. Two of the cuts barely cut the cuticle. They were mere scratches. The other just cut into the skin.

"I haven't made a formal report of the autopsy yet, simply a verbal one to Captain Dyer, which was that the case was one of simple, plain suicide by drowning."

Stockholm, July 8.—There is high military authority for stating that Sweden is [illegible] measures on the frontier to offset the reported threatening attitude of Norway.

The Swedish treasury has borrowed $6,500,000 to pay extraordinary expenditures.

It is reported that two high Norwegian officers have been arrested at Christiania because they refused to forswear allegiance to King Oscar. The rumor, however, has not been confirmed.

"PRETTIEST GIRL IN RHODE ISLAND" SOON TO WED

New York, July 8.—Miss Edith Cleveland, known as "the prettiest girl in Rhode Island," is to marry Charles L. Wheaton, member of the firm of Rowland & Wheaton, manufacturers, of No. 53 Leonard street, New York, and Warren, R. I.

Miss Cleveland is a pronounced blonde, and many a man has been captivated by her. She is a brilliant conversationalist. Her family is prominent socially in New England.

The groom-to-be is a member of the Seventh Regiment, New York Militia, and the Linley and Youtakut Country Clubs. The wedding will be in early Autumn.

CHICAGO STRIKING TEAMSTERS AGAIN ON PICKET

Chicago, July 8.—Extensive picketing in the teamsters' strike was resumed today. "The duties of the pickets," explained T. J. Ryan, business agent of the Department Store Drivers' Union, "will be simply to watch and seek information. There will be no attacks upon either non-union drivers or deserters from the union. It is necessary that the leaders know absolutely the conditions existing in the strike-bound houses in order that they may conduct the strike intelligently."

ST. LOUIS MAN WOULD WED GIRL ON TRIAL

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Florence, July 8.—Great excitement has been caused here by a letter signed John Sawyer of St. Louis, who has written offering to marry a pretty maid who is on trial for attempted murder, though he has never seen her.

Last May Mona Gaeld, who was in the employment of Signor Levi Moreno, a civil engineer of this city, fired upon her faithless sweetheart, but did not succeed in killing him. She was arrested, and is now on trial.

Mr. Sawyer has communicated with her former employer, sending funds for the retaining of the best legal advice obtainable in Mona's defence, and adds that he will come over and marry the girl as soon as she is free—if she will have him. It is believed the letter is a hoax.

RED FLAG LOWERED ON KNIAZ POTEMKIN; CREW SURRENDERS

Special Cable to Boston American.

Constanza, July 8.—The red flag has been hauled down from the Potemkin and replaced by the Roumanian flag. The mutineers surrendered at 11:30 to-day after a long parley ashore with Roumanian officials and almost an eight hour parley aboard the battleship.

The Roumanian officials on the quay saw a boat put off from the Potemkin. It landed a deputation of mutineers, headed by Engineer Mituschenko, who had conducted the pourparlers earlier in the day.

The engineer informed the Roumanian officials that the crews had consented to surrender on the Roumanian government's terms, namely, that they would be considered deserters, lay down their arms and deliver the Potemkin and Torpedoer No. 267 undamaged, whereupon they would be permitted to land and travel in Roumanian territory unhindered. According to [illegible] Premier Kantacuzeno, who had direct telegraphic communication with the King at Bucharest, accepted the Potemkin's surrender.

Crowds Cheer Mutineers.

The captain of the port immediately ordered the Potemkin and torpedo boat brought into the inner harbor.

Lieutenant Commander Negreif, with a number of Roumanian naval officers and [illegible] boarded the [illegible] Commander Negreif himself took the wheel of the Potemkin and steered the battleship into the harbor, the torpedoer following. Both anchored off the quay at 1 o'clock.

The water front and the quay were lined with an immense crowd who received the repentant mutineers with cheers. The Potemkin's sailors responded heartily. As soon as the vessels anchored the work of transferring the mutineers began. The first squad, with their kits, landed at 3 o'clock this afternoon. After dining aboard the remainder debarked before sunset.

Rush for Souvenirs.

The mutineers were given tobacco and drinks and treated like heroes. The port captains ordered Roumanian guards placed on the ships to keep off visitors. The guards failed, for a multitude hired boats and stormed the vessels, swarming up the sides. The port captain then signalled to permit visitors. A tremendous rush followed to obtain souvenirs, the ribbons of the sailors' caps and similar things [illegible]

The [illegible] with [illegible] As [illegible] the mutineers were treated hospitably by the crowds in the streets.

The mutineers had time to clean up before going ashore. They looked a fine body of men. Three Bessarabia Roumanians who were wounded by troops at Theodosia when they tried to land Thursday, were taken to a hospital. The naval and military officers ashore were pestered by the [illegible] to understand the terms of surrender. They were anxious about their fate, and when told they would [illegible] would be permitted to travel where they pleased and stop over the frontier, many cried for joy.

The imprisoned officers, the junior lieutenants, including Navigator Alexeff, were released by the ringleaders. The mutineers courteously returned them their swords.

The officers, when they came ashore, were very anxious to ascertain what the Admiralty at St. Petersburg would [illegible] that they had not joined the mutiny. All that they had done in assisting the mutineers to manage the ship had been done under compulsion and threats of death.

The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN correspondent interviewed one of the mutineers, who said:

"We were compelled to mutiny by the ill-treatment of Commander Golikoff. So far as I know there was no revolutionary plot among the majority of the men. We couldn't stand the conditions on board any longer. When we protested and Golikoff shot Omelchuk we, in a fit of fury, attacked the officers and seized the ship. We didn't fire a shell at Odessa, but only blank shots, as a warning to prevent the authorities killing the men sent ashore to bury Omelchuk.

Fired on Boat's Crew.

"We were not treated well at Theodosia. The authorities did not keep their word. The people were hospitable and volunteered to supply us with provisions, so we did not threaten to bombard the town even after the officials treacherously fired on the boat's crew sent ashore, killing seven and wounding five. We brought the wounded back to the ship. Some of the men wanted to bombard the town for revenge, but he [illegible] objected, declaring that the people of Theodosia were innocent and it would be impossible to punish the innocent when only a few of the officials were guilty of treachery.

"Then we decided to return to Constanza and accept the terms of surrender made by Roumania when we first were here. We had ample provisions. We did not molest any ships we met nor did we fight among ourselves. The ship was as carefully managed as when Golikoff was on board. Except for the deaths of the officers in the first fight there was no bloodshed aboard. The officers who were prisoners were treated respectfully always.

"None of us would return to Russia. We are grateful to Roumania for giving us liberty and not delivering us to Russia."

Reforms Only in Name.

Great satisfaction at the surrender is expressed in St. Petersburg, according to special advices. Now the only thing to annoy the government is the constant appeal of the peaceful reform parties, which are asking for change and for representation in the law-making bodies. Reform may come in name, but never in reality, it is thought, unless the force of arms overturns the dynasty.

The Vienna correspondent of the Chronicle says he has excellent authority for saying that a conspiracy is afoot among the Russian reactionists to dethrone the Czar. This is confirmation of the same statement sent previously in these dispatches.

The reactionists reproach the Emperor for his excessive weakness and incompetency. The reactionists desire as Nicholas's successor Grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch or Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch.

JAMES B. DILL CAN ADD $3000 TO HIS $300,000.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 8.—Friends of James B. Dill, who are worried over the idea of his giving up [illegible] of $300,000 a year for services as a corporation lawyer in Wall street, to accept a judicial position in New Jersey at $3,000, and those who point to the circumstance as a glowing example of great sacrifice for duty's sake, are declared premature with both their sympathy and their admiration.

Mr. Dill need not surrender anything. In fact, he may take New Jersey's $3,000 a year and add it to his $300,000 with perfect safety, so far as the violation of existing statutes is concerned.

[illegible] has been appointed is that of "Lay Judge" of the Court of Errors and Appeals, an institution peculiar to New Jersey alone. The Court consists of the Chancellor, the Chief Justice and associates of the Supreme Court and six "Lay Judges." These last need not even be lawyers. They are supposed to bring into the deliberations of a court a hard, practical business knowledge to aid in the solution of knotty problems. They may be business men, who are not expected to give up their regular pursuits.

BOTH ARMY AND PEASANTS ARE RIPE FOR REVOLT

Chicago, July 8.—A special cablegram to the Daily News from St. Petersburg says:

"General [illegible] wires Prince Potemkin [illegible] the [illegible] negotiations has been spread throughout the army with disastrous effect. The men now insist on being consulted with regard to peace, and the officers are soliciting signatures to a petition for the convocation of a national assembly. They are succeeding. The army is discontented and some sections are mutinous. There is little hope of offering effective resistance to the Japanese."

A cablegram from Moscow says:

"Reports of revolutionary agents from many parts of the empire show that the Agrarian movement is spreading. This is an exceedingly grave symptom. The Government has devised the scheme for keeping the peasants in solid opposition to the workmen. Telegrams have been sent the Czar warning him that unless he gives the people a hand in redeeming the country, provisional governments will spring up locally, and out of them grow a central government, in which the Czar will have no place."

Ex-Governor of Kansas Endorses Pe=ru=na.

"The Public Should Know Its Great Curative Powers."

Isaac Sharp, ex-Governor of Kansas, in a letter from 1227 I street N. E., Washington, D. C., writes:

"I can earnestly recommend your Peruna as an excellent tonic. Its reputation as a cure for catarrh is firmly established by my friends, who have been benefited by its use, and the public should know of its great curative qualities."—Isaac Sharp.

ONE of the most wonderful events in the history of medicine is the multitude of endorsements which Peruna is receiving as a catarrh cure from men of national importance.

The most distinguished men of the United States have no hesitation in lending their influence to assist in letting the public know of the merits of Peruna.

A Prominent Judge Heartily Endorses Pe-ru-na.

Hon. Dewitt C. Nelles, Topeka, Kas., for eight years District Attorney for the Northwestern quarter of Kansas, and at present Judge of the District Court in the Seventeenth Judicial District, writes the following letter to the Peruna Medicine Company concerning the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna:

"As I am particularly liable to catch cold, which at once settles in catarrh and seriously affects my hearing, I am indeed pleased with the help I have found in using Peruna.

"After a severe attack, a bottle never fails to restore me fully to health, and I find that by using it occasionally it keeps me in good condition and prevents me from catching cold.

"It is a fine tonic and I accord it my hearty endorsement."

Cured by Pe-ru-na After Suffering For Seven Years.

Mr. John L. Slusser, 244 N. Chandler street, Topeka, Kas., member Modern Woodmen of America and Deputy Inspector Mystic Shrine, Masonic Lodge, writes:

"I have been afflicted nearly seven years with kidney and bladder trouble and occasionally gall stones, which caused me intense suffering and made it almost impossible for me to attend to my every-day work.

"I spent more than a hundred dollars in doctoring and found that it was only a waste of money, but six dollars worth of Peruna made me a well man.

"I feel it my duty to give due praise to the medicine which made such a blessed change in my life."

Nearly one-half the people are in some way affected by catarrh. Therefore it is almost a national curse, and it is of national import that the people should know of Peruna.

Catarrh enters the system through the nerve centres and affects the mucous membranes. Peruna enables [illegible] nerve centres to repel and expel [illegible] catarrh from the system.

Every Trace of Catarrh Removed By Pe-ru-na.

Mr. Dan Canfield, 2029 Van Buren street, Topeka, Kas., member Boiler Makers Union, writes:

"I have been a sufferer with catarrh for a long time, and it finally settled in my stomach.

"I grew thin and pale, was nauseated at the sight of food, and felt that unless I could obtain relief soon I would have to go away for my health.

"My cousin had used Peruna for a cold and catarrh of the head, and had [illegible] I began using it.

"My restoration to health was slow but sure, and at the end of seven months I was once more in good health, without a trace of catarrh in my system, thanks to Peruna."

Peruna immediately invigorates the nerve centres which give vitality to the mucous membranes. Then the catarrh disappears.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio, and he will give you the benefit of his valuable advice gratis. All correspondence strictly confidential.

DANVERS IN PERIL FROM $100,000 BLAZE.

Danvers, July 8.—The russet leather plant of Charles P. Kerans was totally destroyed by fire to-day. The blaze started from an unknown cause at 1.15 this afternoon.

Five frame buildings averaging about forty by seventy-five feet, with all their contents, including a large stock of leather in process and $30,000 worth of hides in the tannery, with all the books and papers were lost.

The loss is estimated at $100,000, the insurance being about $75,000. The firm employed seventy-five to 125 hands. It recently enlarged the tannery to double capacity.

Salem and Peabody were called on for help to save surrounding lumber, rubber and wheelwright plants.

CORNELL A LOSER IN FAMOUS FORESTRY CASE.

Albany, N. Y., July 8.—The famous Cornell forestry case which involves [illegible] acres of timber land in the Adirondacks, between Tupper and Upper Saranac lakes, has been decided by Attorney General Mayer against Cornell University and in favor of the members of the Association of Residents of Upper Saranac Lake, who, in December, 1901, took the first steps in the proceeding. Upon the application of this organization the attorney general has consented to begin an action to deprive Cornell University of this land, and to annul a contract between the university and the Brooklyn Cooperage Company under which the later has, since May, 1900, been cutting timber on the tract in litigation. This land was purchased by Cornell with $165,000 appropriated for that purpose by the Legislature in 1898 for the purpose of conducting experiments in forestry.

The entire sum appropriated by the Legislature for the experiments was $500,000, but in 1903 Governor Odell declined to let any further instalments be taken.

UNUSUAL FEATURES OF THE STOCK MARKET

New York, July 8.—The situation in Wall street is very unusual. Even the folly of legislators has aided legitimate speculation, and all the world seems busy rounding up the lambs and driving them into the stock corral. It's going to be a great shearing. The campaign has such momentum now that operators could hardly stop it if they wanted to. One bull factor is the un-American stock transfer tax law, which imposes a duty on all citizens of the United States for the benefit of New York State. An attempt is being made to justify the law because it is proving profitable, but injustice cannot be justified because it pays. It nearly always is profitable; but the law has driven the bucket shops out of the city. Thank it for that. By their departure they have confessed their guilt. And the result is that a large volume of business they formerly did comes to the exchanges. This accounts for the increase in trading.

Another unfair law is that taxing savings banks. This law is driving depositors to withdraw their treasured cash to spend it in Wall street. It is sad to think how some of these unfortunates will fare and the Legislature will have much to answer for. The necessity of nullifying any effect Thomas W. Lawson's speech in Kansas might have has driven the Standard Oil system to hold the market firm over the crop report period, when a reaction would naturally have come. The rally that followed the bank statement yesterday was a visible manifestation of this power. As interpreted by the ticker tape, the bank loss of deposits and decrease of loans means that the people, who buy stocks with real money and not with credit, have been purchasing.

The coming rise in prices of pig iron, as a result of the boom in steel rails, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Company is enjoying, adds another element of strength. The trend is certainly upward.

UPWARD TREND IN MARKET GOES ON.

Profit-Taking and Efforts of Bears Fail to Lower Level in the Run of Stock Prices During Past Week

CLOUDS ARE FEW AND DISTANT ON HORIZON

Optimism and Strength Hold Irresistible Sway—Actual Bull Market Not Expected—Traders Look for Upswing

Optimism and strength, with a good degree of activity, continue to characterize the stock market.

Despite the dire predictions of the alarmists, prices have continued to advance slowly, perhaps, but with irresistible force. So buoyant has been the market that, just as the toy balloon bounds upward at the faintest touch, price levels have risen quickly each time that buying orders have been filled on the exchanges.

The Summer dullness which has prevailed spasmodically has not affected the strength of the market. The bears have growled and threatened all sorts of things. Shrewd buyers, meanwhile, have been quietly accumulating such stocks as they could get. They found that Wall Street is pretty well sold out. They also found that their own buying increased the price of their purchases. They were well aware that the conditions which usually affect prices were favorable to advances. If they were also aware that such [illegible] manipulation in the past has been [illegible] prices to take an opposite course to that which should have been followed under the lead of prosperity. During the past week, however, as well as [illegible] the week before, the underlying factors have had their proper influence and those who have dealt in stocks on a common sense basis have profited accordingly.

The Only Drawback.

The only drawback to the course of prices, on the other hand, has been this profit taking. Such advances as those in the Steels, in Reading, Union Pacific, even in Amalgamated, proved too great a temptation for some of the traders. They have been busy realizing on the advances, then buying, and then realizing again. In the meantime a mild bull market has been in progress, and the indications are that its gentle influence will be felt all Summer. In the absence of any cause for the depression of prices, this should be [illegible] for a continuation of a gradual upswing of prices.

The incident of the Equitable muddle may be said to be closed as far as the stock market is concerned. The revelations concerning the disgraceful conditions prevailing in the management of hundreds of millions of dollars had a bad effect during some weeks. This effect has been counteracted by the many excellent features of the security situation, but now that the revelations have been made, it is to be hoped that they will have a salutary effect in the future. They should serve as a warning that "things are not what they seem." Confidence in the market leaders was seriously undermined, but if the public has learned to act for itself, on its own judgment and on the basis of plain facts regarding the condition of the companies in which it invests, the lesson learned from the Equitable exposures will have been a profitable one.

Public in the Market.

The public as contrasted with professional traders has been more in evidence in the stock market during the past week than for many previous weeks. The small fry is an element still lacking, and in a strong [illegible] market, such as is now prevailing, [illegible] missed. That portion of the public which has money to invest, or is [illegible] for a rise, is, however, [illegible] on the course of prices. [illegible] leading operators, also [illegible] the market and seem content [illegible] as regards the future [illegible]. The bear element is not wanting [illegible] seems to be lacking in power to lower price levels. Buying orders are too [illegible] for them and actual stocks are in too scarce a supply. The coming government crop report, if unfavorable, will undoubtedly be the biggest weapon that the bears have had for months. All the indications are, however, that the report will be favorable, and that the granger stocks will jump upward further instead of submitting themselves to the pleasure of the shorts.

There has been some talk of having the government crop report abolished as being inaccurate and misleading. Whether the compilations by experts of the figures sent to Washington by the government's agents [illegible] called misleading is open to [illegible]. But that the crop report is [illegible] to have great influence on the prices of the granger railroads there can be no question. [illegible] report will be the only bar [illegible] to indicate the course of prices. All the other features of the railroad situation are favorable.

Traffic [illegible] heavy and earnings [illegible]. In several instances [illegible] increased dividends are expected [illegible] higher prices. A [illegible] features can have but [illegible] that of still higher prices. All [illegible] of the grangers have been [illegible] of a good crop report.

Confidence in Outlook.

Confidence in the general outlook in[illegible] every day. Not only the railroads but the industrial stocks report a larger volume of trade, and all signs point to further and justifiable expansion. The reports from the iron and steel industry continue promising. New railroads are being built or planned, and the demand for steel for the next year at least is certain to be heavy.

Aside from the actual conditions the prosperity of the country, increased railroad earnings, expected good crops, increased dividends, the prospect of peace in the far East, assurance of an easy money market—the creation of a [illegible] an optimistic sentiment is of itself tending to help the advance of prices. The short interest is being squeezed and in covering itself is also helping the advance. Whatever grounds the bears have had for their belief that prices were to recede, they have so far had little to put aside but their [illegible]. They still call the [illegible] that their turn will come, nevertheless no one who has followed the course of events in the stock market will dispute. The only question is that of time. At present the upward [illegible] seems to be impossible to check for weeks to come. There are no indications of a setback as yet and until the signs [illegible] better and better prices should [illegible] for good [illegible] intrinsic value is at last making itself felt.

Averse to Reaction.

The leading financial interests have not assumed an active part in the stock market, but seem content, however, to allow the trading to continue in its present course. From this it is evident that they are averse to a reaction. Great activity in the market is not to be expected during the Summer, hence no fault can be found with a firm and moderately active market in July. [illegible] after the holiday season is over the big traders will be waiting to keep as much as possible out of the market. Many of them are now abroad or at the Summer resorts. With their return in September will come new life in the speculative world. Renewed activity may then mean either lower or still higher prices, but that time is nearly two months away.

The disposition to absorb the better grades of stock is more pronounced than is the disposition to speculate. Such pure speculation as has existed originated principally with the Western contingent, so called. Even this contingent has been on the long side, its confidence being based on its knowledge of the wealth of its own section of the country.

The new Japanese loan is causing little or no worry in the money market. The general idea seems to be that it will be [illegible] as far as the portion allotted to this country is concerned, without any stringency in cash being caused. The announcement of the new Japanese loan is accompanied by more news of distressing conditions among the Russians. If the internal dissensions culminate in further disaster to the Russian government the security market, through influence on the French Bourse, may suffer severely. It will surely suffer in the event of revolution as the [illegible] war from beginning to end [illegible] been able to make it suffer. All [illegible] favorable features now existing, therefore, are not without their drawbacks, but these are much fewer and more distant than drawbacks usually are.

Steel Issues Leaders.

The Steel issues yesterday were the market leaders, considered together. As [illegible] stock, Reading was the most active feature, 42,700 shares changing hands in the two hours session. Steel common closed at 34⅜, a gain of ⅛ for the day, but this figure represents the maintenance of an advance of several points which has occurred during the past two weeks. Steel preferred also held strong, closing at 102, a gain for the day of [illegible]. As has been the case with the common, Steel preferred has held the advance and is now well above the figure which its supporters had been hoping it would reach. In spite of extensive profit taking the stock did not weaken. Reading was subjected also to profit-taking, and the price dropped ⅝ to 107⅝. When this stock crossed par, not so many days ago, the doubters predicted a [illegible]. Instead, the advance has been continued, and no one wonders at the profit taking.

Amalgamated yesterday gained ⅛ to 83⅛. All through the week this stock has held firm, although subjected to considerable pressure when the price broke so. All the other declines were fractional except in Metropolitan, which lost 1⅛ to 12[illegible]. Chicago Northwestern showed the greatest [illegible] Kansas [illegible] also [illegible] first preferred gained 1⅛ to 93¾. Total sales for the day were [illegible] shares, showing a fair degree of activity for a Summer short session.

Trading Narrow, Tone Strong.

In Boston the trading was narrow, but the tone strong. Although business was restricted, there was improvement throughout the copper list. The strength of the market for copper metal has been recognized and has resulted in a better tone in the copper shares. The demand for the metal is great and [illegible] become enormous. The inevitable result [illegible] higher prices for the shares [illegible]. United States Mining was a feature of the trading yesterday, advancing a point to 2[illegible]. The advance was not maintained, however, the closing figure [illegible] the net gain [illegible]. Centennial gained 1¼ to 2[illegible], and Wolverine gained [illegible] to 110[illegible]. Copper Range was quiet [illegible] gained ¼ to 6[illegible]. Other changes were unimportant.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company has applied to the New York Stock Exchange to list $2,840,000 additional unified fifty year 4 per cent bonds of 1940.

The Essex County Commissioners will receive proposals until July 10 for a 3½ per cent six months' loan of $12,000, to be dated July 20, 1905.

The statement of the New York banks showed that the surplus during the week decreased $3,701,050, and now stands at $7,957,825, as compared with $20,017,725 a year ago. Loans and deposits decreased in the aggregate about $12,000,000. The decrease in the surplus was caused by a falling off of over $3,500,000 in cash holdings.

The total bank clearings of all the clearing houses of the United States for the week ending yesterday were $2,630,648,875, as compared with $1,823,804,147 the previous week, an increase of 45.7 per cent.

INJUNCTION STOPS WORK ON NEW HAVEN ROAD.

$1,000,000 Four-Tracking Improvement Tied Up by Superior Court Unless the Aldermen Act for Railroad

New Haven, Ct., July 8.—The injunction which has been granted in the Superior Court here against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, to restrain it from altering the railroad "Cut" in the Shore Line Division in this city, will tie up the proposed $1,000,000 four-tracking improvement for the present year at least, unless a way is found through the actioon oof the Board of Aldermen. It remains for the Board of Aldermen to decide whether or not they will favor the appointment of a triple-headed commission to take up the matter of a four-track "Cut" with the railroad or not.

There are opponents of this measure in this city, and it is possible that President Mellen's hope of four-tracking the Shore Line division of his road will be put over for many months as far as the New Haven end of the division is concerned. As long as this work is held up, just so long will heavy freighting business be kept off the Shore Line route. Hundreds of Congress avenue property owners have petitioned the Board of Aldermen not to have the layout of the road changed.

SAIL ALONG NORTH SHORE OR FISH IN DEEP SEA.

People Seeking Cool Spots To-day May Find Them on the Steamer Gloucester or on Board the King Philip

Everybody is seeking a cool spot to-day to avoid the dust and intense heat of the city. Attired in the most comfrotable and cooling costumes possible, Bostonians are thronging the trolleys and railroads for trips to the many pleasure resorts, including Nantasket and Crescent beaches, while others are seeking the refreshing ocean breezes on the many pleasure boats running out of the harbor.

One of the most delightful all-day trips is that on the Gloucester steamer running along the North Shore to Cape Ann, enjoying the cooling ocean winds and witnessing the magnificent scenery along the shore. The steamer starts at 10:15 a. m., passing the islands in the harbor, thence heading down the coast, affording views of Lynn, Nahant, Marblehead, Baker's Island, Magnolia, the famous "Norman's Woe" and rounding Eastern Point. A stop of sufficient length is made in the old Fish city to allow visitors to view the many quaint places of interest.

The deep sea fishing fiend, desirous of obtaining relief from city turmoil and heat, can take the steamer King Philip at 10 a. m. for the fishing grounds out in the bay and for one dollar have a day's outing, including bait, lines and chowder free. To stimulate interest among the voyagers, prizes of $75 in gold for ladies and gentlemen are offered for the biggest haddock or codfish caught in the season.

$3,500,000 PAID FOR STREET RAILWAYS

New Orleans, July 8.—All of the physical property of the New Orleans Railways Company under recently adopted reorganization plans, sold at auction at noon for $3,500,000. Mortimer N. Buckner, representing the New York Security and Trust Company, was the only bidder. This is the last technicality in reorganization which reduce capitalization from $50,000,000 to $40,000,000. The property is an amalgamation of all street railroads in the city, and of electric light and gas plants.

5,000 COTTON BALES BURN; $360,000 LOSS

Meridian, Miss., July 8.—Five thousand bales of cotton and all the machinery in the compress building were destroyed by fire shortly after midnight. The total loss is about $360,000, which is fully insured.

ARCANUM ORGAN DEFENDS NEW RATES.

July Bulletin Warns Members That Special Session of the Supreme Council Cannot Be Called by Grand Councils

DEFENDS NEW POLICY AS JUST AND EQUITABLE

The new rates in the Royal Arcanum will satisfy the members who will make an impartial investigation of the conditions in the order, according to the July number of the Royal Arcanum Bulletin, the official organ. Much space is given in defence of the new rates, and warns those who are calling for a special session of the Supreme Council that the seven grand councils cannot, as some suppose, order such a meeting. It says in part:

"An impression has got abroad that seven Grand Councils have the right to call a special meeting of the Supreme Council. Others have the impression that the Executive Committee has the right to call a special meeting of the Supreme Council. The only authority for calling a special meeting of the Supreme Council is given in section 5, which says:

How to Call Meeting.

"'Special meetings shall be called by the Supreme Regent upon the written request of a majority of the Representatives to the Supreme Council representing seven or more Grand Councils.'

"There are seventy-seven representatives to the Supreme Council. A majority of this number is thirty-nine, and it will require the written request of thirty-nine representatives to the Supreme Council for calling a special session of the Supreme Council.

"If the membership do not like the new rates the way for them to be changed is through the representatives in the Supreme Council, and the next annual session of that body may adopt new rates more satisfactory to the majority of the membership.

"The Supreme Council will welcome the fullest investigation of the new plan by the membership, being satisfied that the more it is investigated the more it will be liked."

Fraternity vs. New Rates.

In an unsigned leading article entitled, "Fraternity vs. New Rates," the Bulletin says:

"Many opponents of the new rates allege that the fraternal idea has been abandoned. Under the old plan there is no equitable basis for adjustment of rates; the annual cost is haphazard, liable to be increased at any time, and in the end become prohibitive to both old and new members, some are paying more than the annual mortality cost at their attained ages, others are paying less; members have been coming in with the idea that they are paying whole life rates when they are paying term rates from month to month with a small loading to make the rate constant for some years, but how long no one could tell; the young are contributing in excess of their own current mortality cost and the excess is applied to make up the deficits of those who are contributing less than their current mortality cost, and there is no guarantee that in the future young men can be induced to come in and be taxed to make up the deficits of those older than themselves. Is this fraternal?

"The assessment plan, pay as you go, chip-in policy, is all right for the first twenty or thirty years, when the bulk of the membership is young and fresh from medical selection. But it will not work successfully in the second generation when the age distribution ranges as high as 85 or 90, when the average age is 50 and a very large proportion have passed 60. It would be unfraternal to attempt to do business in the second generation on rates adequate only for the first generation."

"ELIJAH" SANDFORD SAFE; REACHES MALTA

Lisbon Falls, Me., July 8.—A cablegram was received at Shiloh to-day announcing that the yacht Coronet, owned by the Holy Ghost and Us Society, has arrived at the island of Malta, in the Mediterranean Sea, with the Rev. Frank W. Sandford, leader of the society and self-styled "Elijah," on board. Some fear had been expressed for the safety of the yacht, as no word had been received since her departure from Freeport, Me., on June 4.

PRETTY GIRL SAYS SHE WAS HELD UP AND ROBBED.

Miss Denehy's Story of Being Attacked by Two Men at Newton Centre, However, Is Not Wholly Credited by Police

Miss Nellie Denehy, of Roxbury, the pretty domestic in the employ of G. Horace Williams, Jr., of No. 234 Langley road, Newton Centre, who claims she was held up and robbed at the corner of Langley road and Knowles street, has gone to her home in Roxbury to recover from the shock and fright.

"I had been to Boston and was returning home about 11 o'clock, when two men approached me from Knowles street," said Miss Denehy to a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN. "I paid no attention to them, as I did not suppose they intended to molest me. When I reached the corner of Knowles street and Langley road, they rushed toward me, and before I had any time to scream, one clapped his hand over my mouth and grabbed me by the back of the neck.

"The other one caught hold of my hand and grabbed my pocketbook, which contained about two dollars. They then ran down Knowles street, and I was too horrified to scream. I know now I should have given an alarm, so they could have been captured.

"I hurried home and went to my room. I was so nervous I could not sleep. I paced the hallway and my room until morning. I then told Mrs. Williams of the robbery and Mr. Williams notified the police. I was so weak from fright that I could not eat and Mrs. Williams called Dr. E. A. Andrews. He told me I must take a rest for a few days until I got over the scare. I think one of my assailants wore a mustache and the other was smooth shaven. Both had on dark suits and derby hats. I do not know whether I would recognize them again or not, as I was so frightened I did not stop to look at them."

Miss Denehy had been employed at the Williams's residence but four days, but Mr. and Mrs. Williams say they have no reason to doubt her story. The police are not inclined to believe it. At the time the robbery is said to have taken place several neighbors were sitting on the steps and verandas of their residences. But a few yards distant was Patrolman Mariner on the veranda of his home. Speaking, Patrolman Mariner told a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter that he saw no men run up Knowles street and he says he would have seen them if they had gone by his house.

IN LIFE DREW UP MAUSOLEUM PLANS

Worcester, July 8.—One of the largest monumental contracts ever given out in Western Massachusetts has just been awarded to Cook & Muir of Springfield. These contractors are to erect a mausoleum in Hope cemetery for James Norcross and family. The work is to be begun as soon as the foundations, just completed, have hardened.

A short time previous to his death James A. Norcross drew up the plans for the mausoleum. Mr. Norcross was one of the firm of Norcross Brothers. His plans provide for a structure twenty-three feet high.

FIRE BULLETS AT TWO MEN IN JAIL

Ironton, Mo., July 8.—Masked men early to-day overpowered Sheriff Marchall and forced their way into the corridor of the county jail, where they fired several shots at William and Arthur Spaugh, held for the murder of Sheriff Polk several weeks ago. One of the Spaughs received three bullets in his leg. His brother is fatally wounded. The Spaughs declare they recognized some of their assailants.

NEWPORT LOOKS TO UTTER FOR RELIEF.

Citizens, Tired of Police Commission Incubus, Are Hopeful That the Governor Will Exercise His Power of Removal

HE IS BUSY STUDYING THE SITUATION THERE

State's Executive Has Been Opposed, in the Past, to the Principle of Forcing Commissions on the Cities and Towns

Providence, July 8.—Governor Utter is looking into the question of investigating the police conditions at Newport, in response to a set of resolutions unanimously adopted by the city council of Newport and has promised to announce early next week whether or not he will appoint a committee of three Newporters, two Republicans and one Democrat, to report on the conduct of affairs by the Republican triumvirate known as the Newport Police Commission.

The council, which is controlled by the Republicans, has refused to pay the salaries of the commissioners since February, and paid salaries for February only because of a Supreme Court decision compelling such payment. Mayor Patrick J Boyle and City Solicitor J. Stacy Brown have contended that the police commission act was unconstitutional in that it interfered with the sacred right of home rule, but there is no reason to believe that the State Supreme Court will rule that the law is void

As Governor Utter was originally opposed to the principle of forcing police commissions upon the cities and towns of the State and has often expressed himself as hostile to any extension of such legislation the people of Newport, who are heartily against the present commission and have frequently sought to have the law creating it repealed, are hopeful that he will exercise the power of removal vested in him and thus rid them of the commission

RIVAL STEAMERS IN BLOCK ISLAND SERVICE.

The Mary Begins Trips in Competition with the Town's Craft—The New Shoreham and Anti-Champlinites Happy

Providence, July 8.—Coincident with the serving of an attachment for $2,000 on the town treasurer of New Shoreham (Block Island) to satisfy a judgment obtained by Boatbuilder McIvor of Boston against the town, the steamer Mary, rival to the town's steamer New Shoreham, began her daily trips to the island, landing at the old harbor, which is at the centre of the business section where the large majority of hotel guests and shippers are to be found. The Mary is largely owned by Block Islanders who are opposed to the Champlin regime in town affairs and there was much jubilation when she arrived this week from the [illegible] after [illegible] months service.

Last year it is said the town's steamer did not make expenses [illegible] in trying [illegible] the City of Haven [illegible] United States District Court where several Champlinites were indicted but have not yet been tried.

PAUL JONES'S BODY NOW ON BOARD BROOKLYN.

Crowd of 10,000 See Great Admiral's Body Taken to United States Warship in the Harbor of Cherbourg

Cherbourg, France, July 8.—The coffin containing the remains of John Paul Jones the first great American admiral was transferred this afternoon from the mortuary chapel on the wharf of the American Steamship Line where it rested overnight to the Brooklyn, Rear Admiral Sigsbee's flagship.

A torpedo boat approached the dock at 12 30, and the [illegible] was put aboard, a cortege composed of American sailors and French soldiers and sailors forming a procession from the wharf to the [illegible] the torpedo boat [illegible] Rear Admiral Sigsbee and [illegible] special ambassador, [illegible] the remains led the procession, accompanied by Admiral Besson

Many Floral Offerings.

The coffin was covered with a flag, and behind the casket marched sailors bearing many beautiful floral offerings, which had been sent by prominent French officials and American citizens living in France. A crowd of [illegible] people witnessed the ceremony attendant upon the placing of the casket aboard the torpedo boat.

The bands played "Hail Columbia" and "The Marseillaise" while the procession was moving, and during the time when the coffin was being put aboard the vessel

Salute from Warships.

The coffin was placed on a catafalque which had been erected at the stern of the torpedo boat which moved off toward the Brooklyn, when all the warships in the harbor united in a salute.

At 2.30 o'clock the casket was hoisted aboard the Brooklyn and conveyed to the catafalque, which had been erected to receive it and preparations were at once made by the American squadron to sail for home.

HOW TO ACT IN CASES OF DANGER OF DROWNING WHILE BATHING.

ANNUAL HARVEST OF DEATH IN WATER HAS COMMENCED.

FOR NOVICES:

DON'T depend too much on the lifeguards.

FOR EVERYBODY:

DON'T go in water overheated.

The annual harvest of deaths by drowning has begun. Daily the news chronicles of New England contain the accounts of bathers and boaters drowned in the surf of the coast or the inland ponds of the country.

It is an old story. Every Summer hears it told. It is never a pleasant story. It is a bitter one to the relatives of the men and women, boys and girls who lose their lives in the water. It is none the less sad because it is common. It is all the sadder because in almost nine cases out of ten, it need not have occurred at all.

Recklessness, carelessness, ignorance—these three, but the greatest of these is ignorance. This is the secret of New England's hundreds of drowning accidents every Summer.

Nearly everybody at the seashore bathes in the surf. Inland, thousands bathe in fresh water. Here is some advice for all who are in either of these categories. Study it well and in the time of emergency remember it. It will certainly help you and it may save your life.

Caution Always Needed.

Whether you are a good swimmer or a [illegible] The best swimmers drown when [illegible] cramps.

[illegible] Wade into the water until it is breast high [illegible] You [illegible] all your strength [illegible] and swim parallel to the shore.

[illegible] as soon as possible after entering the water. [illegible]

Should you dive into the water be sure [illegible]

Never go [illegible] water when you are [illegible] within an hour either before or after a meal.

[illegible]

Advice to Parents.

Here is a little advice to parents who take their children to the water with them

Don't let them wade in the water. It [illegible] of blood to the head and a [illegible] is likely to follow after a [illegible]

Don't force them into the water

[illegible] sustain [illegible]

Everyone who [illegible] face to face with [illegible]

Last of all [illegible] the advice to bathers, keep your head.

Breathe naturally. Keep your head back so that [illegible] may be free. Keep the hands under the water and move in a sort of [illegible] This will keep you [illegible]

Don't raise the arms out of the water in an attempt to seize anything. The [illegible] your head under

Don't try to climb into a boat over the side. Use the stern

As an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure here are two things to be remembered one by everybody, the other especially by girls.

1.—Don't attempt to change places in a boat while out on the water. This is especially true if the boat is a canoe

2.—Don't go canoeing with a man unless you know he is proficient with the paddle. His best intentions will not save you from drowning after the upset if he only thinks he knows how to navigate

What an Expert Says.

Last of all, presuming that you, a good swimmer, are in a party in which another member has fallen into the water, here is the best advice as to how to save his life, prepared on the authority of no less an expert than William C. Rowe, swimming instructor at the municipal building on Columbia Road and in the women's department of the L Street Baths

Seize him under the arms or under the chin

If he is violent or hysterical keep out of his reach and let him wear himself out trying before trying to tow him ashore

When he is quiet support his head from behind on your hands and swim to shore or safety with your feet

Be careful to keep his mouth and nose out of water so he can breathe freely

When you have got him ashore, if he is unconscious get the water from his stomach [illegible] by inverting him for a moment or rolling him across a barrel

Produce artificial respiration by moving the arms from above the head down to the side and pressing on the lungs Repeat this about eighteen times a minute until natural breathing is caused. Do not give up for two hours at least. People have been resuscitated [illegible] after being taken unconscious and apparently dead from the water

At the same time rub the calves of the legs upward, to send the blood to the heart

When consciousness returns give the patient a little spirits in hot water or some hot tea or coffee. Do not pour any liquid down the throat of one who is unconscious.

ADVICE FOR BATHERS.

By William C. Rowe,

Be cautious, no matter how proficient as a swimmer.

Unless you are a good swimmer, wade into the water up to your breast, then plunge in and swim parallel to the shore, so as not to get out of your depth.

Should you fall overboard keep the head back so that breathing may be free, keep the hands under the water and move in a sort of dog-paddle motion. This will keep you afloat

In entering the water it is more healthful to dive than to wade in

NEW PROVIDENCE-WOONSOCKET LINE

Providence, July 8 An air line electric road between this city and Woonsocket, one of a chain which will eventually be used between Providence, Worcester and Boston, is promised within a few months. Bay State capital is behind the project, which is well advanced, and aside from a reduction of fares averaging one-half those now in force on the steam roads the promise is made that there shall be little if any reduction in speed. The time consumed on the steam roads between this city and Providence is forty minutes, and the new electric cars, which will be adapted for high speed, will make the distance in from forty to forty-five minutes, and, when running express, will do even better.

LAW AND MARRIAGE IN QUEER TANGLE IN COLORADO.

Judge Who Divorced 200 Persons Declared Never to Have Been Legally Elected, and Embarrassment Will Result

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Denver, Col., July 8.—The decision of the State Supreme Court that Denver never legally elected County Judge Henry V. Johnson may result in some interesting legal tangles. During the past six months Judge Johnson has divorced 200 people, many of whom have gone to Cheyenne, Wyo., Colorado's Gretna Green, and remarried, thereby avoiding the State's remarriage law. Numerous wills have been admitted to probate by Judge Johnson, and many claims allowed against estates. Are these invalidated?

Take the case of James Smith, for instance. When the judge declared the bonds of matrimony severed on his payment of $10,000 alimony to Mrs. Smith, naturally he looked on that part of his life as a closed incident and he proceeded to lay his heart, hand and pocketbook, minus the aforesaid $10,000, at the feet of Miss Alice Brown.

If he weds Miss Brown he is a bigamist. If he does not he will be sued as a trifler. How many Colorado couples are in the same predicament has not yet been ascertained, but two score is a low estimate

PROVIDENCE $1 GAS DUE TO CAMPAIGN OF AMERICAN.

Reduction in Price Practically Assured on or About October 1—Pawtucket May Also Get Benefit of Cheaper Illuminant

Providence, July 8 Gas for $1, or less is promised the people of Providence on or about October 1. This is largely the outcome of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S agitation, because large consumers in this city who have read the illuminating evidence produced before the Bay State Gas Commissioners, have brought pressure to bear upon the Providence Gas Company for a reduction and the directors of the corporation will take action some time this month.

It is learned that the proposition which the directors will indorse will leave the present price at $1.10 per 1,000 cubic feet gross, with a discount of 10 cents for all bills paid monthly ten days after the bills are rendered. It is also proposed to grant to the larger consumers an additional discount of 5 per cent., bringing the net cost of gas used in the big manufacturing plants, hotels and such establishments down to 95 cents per 1,000 cubic feet

At Pawtucket also there is said to be an excellent prospect of cheaper gas in the near future

WHY HELENA TRIPP THINKS SHE IS THE HEROINE IN DISGUISE OF A NOVEL THAT ROUSED A TOWN'S IRE

An Author's Amazing Revenge

Intimate Story of a Real Courtship Published with Fictitious Details When the Girl Married Another

In the annals of fact or fiction no such amazing revenge of a rejected sweetheart can be found as that attributed to Rudolph Denis, a handsome young Frenchman, who courted Miss Helena Madsen, one of the prettiest and most highly esteemed girls in Westport.

The young woman is now Mrs. Ephraim Tripp. She has been married less than a year. The vengeance that has visited her, she is confident, emanated from her former suitor. It is in the form of a novel, published anonymously and circulated among her friends, in which the alleged secrets of their courtship are laid bare.

In the book real names are used. The hero is Rudolph de Nis, different in capitalization only from the real name of the young man who laid his heart at the young woman's feet. The heroine is Helen Madsen. The scene of the book is Westport, a large, straggling village near New Bedford, with itswinding roads and grassy slopes, where Miss Madsen and Rudolph Denis spent many an hour together. Names of other residents of the town, slightly altered but not so as to hide their identity, are used freely.

The author's name as given on the first page of the novelette is "Luce Vonvard de Conde." It is believed to be fictitious, and Mrs. Tripp and many of her relatives and friends declare that the real author is none other than Rudolph Denis. The book is entitled, "Is This Your Sin, Helena?" In it is told the story of an idyllic courtship, a story of twilight rambles, moonlight drives, stolen kisses, warm embraces, lovers' vows. Many things in the book, it is agreed by Westport people, are true. This convinces the people of that section that only a man who was thoroughly conversant with the situation could have been the author. Happily, the book which was aimed at the young married woman has utterly failed in its apparent intent, because her character cannot be assailed.

CHAPTER I.

HELENA AMONG THE HUCKLEBERRIES.

[illegible] that Helena Madsen ever saw Rudolph Denis was in a huckleberry [illegible] near her home in Westport. Helena was with a member of her family, and Rudolph [illegible] some friends. Helena at that time was thirteen years old and Rudolph [illegible] three years her senior. [illegible] berry field the boy and girl [illegible] for a few moments and [illegible] friends.

It was only a few weeks after that that Rudolph was employed on the Madsen farm. Why this boy was attracted to his [illegible] work no one can remember at [illegible] that he remembered [illegible] of the little girl he saw [illegible] huckleberry bushes?

[illegible] found a good home with the Madsens. He was bright and [illegible] literary leaning. He [illegible] wrote French. So rapidly did he advance in the favor of Peter Madsen, [illegible] that the milk business, which the older man had conducted for years, was turned over to the boy. This, however, seemed to be his undoing. The [illegible] to prosper. Patrons dropped off. The horse that the young man drove died. Rudolph himself chose to live in a sort of hut in the woods, and, it is declared, led a very irregular life.

In the book that has been circulated at Westport [illegible] of the life of [illegible] passed over in silence. If the [illegible] the same as the boy who formerly drove the milk route that part of his young [illegible] experience has been omitted.

CHAPTER II.

While young Remis ran a milk wagon until he was finally compelled to give it up, Helena Madsen, the oldest of half a dozen girls in the family, rapidly grew to womanhood. She was one of the prettiest girls in the picturesque coast town. Like many of the other young women of that neighborhood, she obtained employment in one of the mills in order that she might have more money with which to bedeck herself with apparel suitable to her beauty. She had suitors in plenty.

Of lively disposition, Helena attended most of the social gatherings of the neighborhood. She was an exceptionally fine dancer. Among those who worshipped at her shrine was Rudolph Denis, the boy she had met in the huckleberry patch. He had grown into a rather handsome young man and was regarded as exceedingly clever. Helena did not frown upon him, and frequently they took friendly rambles along the lonely lanes and beneath the shady trees in which Westport abound.

In the novel Helena Madsen, the heroine, is described in this language at this period of her life:

Mr. Madsen's eldest child, Helena, was now in her twentieth year. She was a trifle below the medium height, and of symmetrical figure. A mass of dark brown hair crowned her shapely head. From her mother she inherited the low brow, the small shell-like ears, the thin red lips and the deep blue eyes, wherein the soul seemed to shine. The round roll chin, and slightly Roman nose were her father's.

About this time, Rudolph de Nis came to Westport on a business matter and remained a few weeks. At Madsen Hall the doors were thrown open to him. It was six years since he had first crossed its threshold. Then he had come to serve the master, now he came to woo the daughter's hand.

How this was done is told in part in the following language:

Night had thrown its mantle over the earth. The moon beams stole silently through the flitting clouds. The rustle of the crisp brown leaves as they fluttered groundward was wafted on the air, blending sweetly with the low chanting murmur of the Autumn breeze.

They were seated in a carriage, slowly wending their way homeward. For some moments neither had spoken. It was the lull before the storm. She knew he loved her; the preamble was unnecessary.

"Is it useless to hope, Helena?" he said, bending over her as he spoke.

She lay back, almost buried in the cushions, his hand rested on her arm, and he felt her shudder as though filled with a nameless dread. He looked into her face in mute appeal, himself filled with a passionate yearning. Her eyes were filled with tears which, coursing adown her burning cheeks, fell upon his hand; her lips were slightly parted, seeming like a rosebud bursting into bloom; their hands met, then he drew her to him, and held her in a long, passionate embrace. She [illegible] the light of his own [illegible] in her eyes. [illegible] death should sever the tie that bound them.

CHAPTER III.

AN ANGELIC ACROSTIC

Helena Madsen was employed in the thread mill not far from her home. Last Summer Rudolph Denis [illegible] left Westport and it was understood that he was making his home at Orange, N. J. Occasionally the young woman received letters from him. So important were these missives regarded by the writer that they were invariably registered. The postmaster remembers distinctly various occasions on which Miss Madsen called in person to receive the letters.

It was about this time that Ephraim Tripp fell in love with the pretty mill girl. Ephraim is a sturdy, unassuming, industrious young farmer. He had known Helena all her life, but had not before paid her any particular attention. The son of one of the most prominent and most well-to-do residents of Westport, of unimpeachable character, it is not to be wondered at that Helena looked kindly upon his advances.

Coincident with the beginning of the courtship of Ephraim and Helena the hero of the novel was engaged in writing verses to the Helena of the book. As a result the following acrostic appears:

Heaven's just and kindly hand I pray
Ever lead you on and strew
Life's rugged path with flowers gay
Each flower dipped in sweetest dew
No thorn or bramble there may be
Along the path God marked for thee.

May joy be thine forever, friend
And deeds of valor crown thy life with bliss
Deeper thoughts than these some day blend,
Softly leaving on thy lips an angel's kiss
E'en when silvered locks thy temples grace
Ne'er forget me, friend, or the lines I trace.

It will be seen by reading the acrostic that the verses are addressed to Helena Madsen. In the book, the hero is made to say to a young woman, who asked him what he was writing, this:

"This is the young lady whose name I have used in the acrostic. I believe you have never met before," he said, handing her a photograph of Helena.

"Let me introduce you, Leslie, this is my affianced."

TRIPP'S TRIUMPH

As the Summer waned, Rudolph De Nis wandered back to Westport. There is no doubt as to what attracted him. Helena Madsen [illegible] and had an [illegible]. It was then that Helena told R[illegible] that she was engaged to marry Ephraim Tripp [illegible] future. The young [illegible] friends that Rudolph [illegible] protested [illegible] [illegible] woman [illegible] taken [illegible] mistaken [illegible] constant to a man [illegible] months [illegible] making love to some [illegible] green-eyed monster [illegible] disappearance [illegible] to the whole affair.

CHAPTER V.

VENGEANCE AVERTED

The autumn leaves began to take on color. Helena Madsen and Ephraim Tripp's courtship progressed toward its fruition. The wedding day had been set. The ceremony was to take place on the evening before Thanksgiving. They were very happy in their mutual love. Together they attended the theatre one evening in Fall River. Sitting in a seat not far from them they both saw and recognized Rudolph Denis. It was a casual meeting, and so far as Helena or Ephraim was concerned it had no special significance.

In the novelette the meeting between the hero and the heroine and her escort is thus described:

Saturday evening. The Academy of Music was thronged. Rudolph sat in the orchestra; on his right a few seats behind sat Helena and her escort. Rudolph had known that she would be here to-night and he came also. To-night — Vengeance swift and sure. It was his intention to point her out and denounce her before all these people.

He rose. His right hand sought his hip pocket and rested on the butt of the weapon concealed there. The [illegible] caused the woman sitting beside him to look up. It was Leslie Gray.

"Why are you here, Leslie?" he asked, without facing her. "I mean when did you come to Fall River?"

"A week ago with your father," she said. "He came to know what you were doing and what caused you to decide to close out your business."

"What did he learn?"

"All he wished to know."

"He told you everything?"

"All that was necessary."

"You forgive Helena?"

"Helena? Never."

CHAPTER VI.

"GIVE BACK MY GIFTS"

The wedding day approached rapidly. Helena was busy with her nuptial finery. Almost every day she saw Ephraim. One afternoon she was surprised to meet Rudolph Denis. He chided her for promising to marry a man whom, he asserted, she did not love. Helena laughed at him. During their years of friendship Rudolph had made her a number of small gifts. He asked her to return his presents. She refused to take the trouble, declaring that anything he had given her was not of sufficient importance to justify it.

Why will a woman marry a man she does not love? On the eve of his departure for Westport, Rudolph had sought Helena, intending to have her return all the gifts he had given her during their courtship. She refused to surrender them, whereupon Rudolph had said:

"What will Tripp say?"

"If Tripp does not like it, he can lump it!"

Her answer was curt and decisive. Marriage causes more misery than aught else.

CHAPTER VII.

A WESTPORT WEDDING

On Thanksgiving eve last Helena Madsen and Ephraim Tripp were married. It was a quiet family wedding and only the immediate friends and relatives of the young couple were present at the ceremony. Ephraim took his bride to the home of his parents, and she was received with open arms by his gray-haired mother and aged father.

The elder Tripp is one of the most substantial residents of Westport. For many years he was one of the Selectmen of the town. When he and Mrs. Tripp took the young bride of their son into their home there was no one in the country who did not congratulate them upon the acquisition of a daughter of whom anyone might feel proud. Since that time the elder couple have had every reason to be glad of their son's choice.

If it was the intention of the author of the anonymous novel to annoy Helena Tripp or to make trouble between her and the family of her husband he has met with dismal failure. Mr. and Mrs. Tripp have every confidence in the world in their son's wife.

At this period the author of the anonymous book writes:

Helena Madsen lived happily [illegible]. De Nis was miles away from her in a higher sphere of life. He had no thought of her now, for in his heaven had risen a new light, the light of a pure and holy love. Leslie Gray was his promised bride. He was her first and only love. Destiny willed that he deal out to Helena the punishment that he had once spared her.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE REVENGE

About two months ago residents of Westport received anonymously through the mails a paper covered novelette entitled, "Helena, Is This Your Sin?" A perusal of the book, which contained forty-eight pages, was sufficient to cause an uproar in the community. Great anger was felt.

None of the books, however, was received at the Tripp home. One of Mrs. Tripp's married daughters was made cognizant of the contents of the pamphlet and she wrote to her mother about it. In that way the news was first heard at the Tripp home.

The people began to speculate at once as to the author of the book, and the cause that had led to its publication.

In the book itself a very lame explanation is given as to why the personal story of a courtship, many of the statements in which are false, should be spread broadcast through an anonymous publication.

The [illegible] takes Rudolph De Nis fall heir to a fortune from his grandfather, and [illegible].

At last there was one that bitterly envied him his success. This was [illegible] a shiftless, [illegible] fellow; [illegible] returning to his [illegible], Rudolph found that [illegible] papers had [illegible] which Rudolph [illegible] notes of the events during his acquaintance with Helena.

[illegible] Having failed in his attempt to blackmail Rudolph, he [illegible] to escape [illegible]. The diary was missing. [illegible] confessed to having sold it to a publisher [illegible].

Sold to a publisher! And their names, Helena's and Rudolph's, written therein. The eyes of the world were to look upon a record of their past.

How quickly the world forgets! It is a fallacy; the world never forgets. Each incident with its minute detail is imprinted upon the pages of the [illegible].

Though the book is closed, it is destined to blow open at some improper time [illegible] revealing to the world [illegible].

The [illegible] of gossip, the scandal mongers, [illegible] like waiting vultures swoop down upon their prey and complete the work of an inadvertent fate.

The [illegible] but the woman [illegible]. It is [illegible] the woman pays.

CHAPTER IX.

DENIS DENOUNCED.

When a representative of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN saw the happy family circle at the Tripp home, he was amazed that anyone should have made an attempt to destroy the serenity of the peaceful household. Helena Tripp, beautiful as a girl, is more attractive as a youthful matron. She has the blue eyes, the red lips, the shining pearly teeth and the mass of brown hair that is given to the heroine of the novel. She, herself, declared that she felt certain that the author aimed at her in portraying the character of the leading woman of the book. She said, without hesitation, that no one except Rudolph Denis knew of some of the incidents related in the volume. The book contains a number of French phrases, and Mrs. Tripp said that this was one of the characteristics of her former friend.

"I met Rudolph Denis nine years ago," said Helena Tripp. "We were both huckleberrying at the time. Later he came to our house to work. He was about sixteen years old at the time, a little older than I. He became practically a member of our family and was treated as such. He was a rather clever fellow. His letters showed that. Father sold him the milk business, but he did not get on well with it. Then he disappeared. Frequently he came back and seemed to be doing well, if one could judge from his [illegible] clothing.

"I never knew exactly where he was or what he was doing. He never talked to [illegible]. He said something [illegible] having lived in Canada, and also mentioned that he had a sister."

"Did Rudolph make love to you?"

"Yes, that is, he tried to."

"Did he propose marriage to you?"

"Yes, [illegible]."

"Did you ever promise to marry him?"

"No, I never did."

"Did you ever consider that you were his sweetheart?"

"No, I never thought of myself in that light."

"Did you walk with him along the Sandford road and other highways frequented by sweethearting couples?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

"When did you see him last?"

"I think it was shortly before I was married. He used to come to meet me when I was walking home from the mill. I got afraid of him and had some of my sisters meet me and accompany me home. He made me very nervous."

"Did you consider him a handsome young man?"

"Well, he wasn't what I would call handsome."

"Do you believe that he is the author of this book?"

"I do not see how anybody else could have written it. The author has used the names of people here with such slight changes that it is easy to recognize whom he means. In the book he refers to 'Ed Bas.' He means evidently Ed Bassett, who formerly lived in Westport, but I believe now has moved away from here."

"What do you think was his motive?"

"It must have been jealousy and revenge."

"Yes," spoke up Mrs. Tripp's mother-in-law, "it was certainly jealousy and revenge, and I want to say to the public that no matter what this book says about our daughter it cannot harm her in any way. My son could not bring into our home any woman who would not have our entire respect and confidence. There is only one thing that has worried me in this matter, and that is the fear that some personal harm might come to Helena."

"Do you mean that Denis might come back and harm her?" suddenly asked Ephraim Tripp, who had been listening to the conversation.

"Yes," replied his mother.

"Just let him try it!" exclaimed the son. And there was a gleam in his eyes which boded no good to Rudolph Denis, should he reappear in that neighborhood.

CHARGE FRAUD IN CITIZENSHIP PAPERS.

John J. Keane, Declared Not Guilty in Registration Cases in Cambridge, Now Is Accused in United States Court

ARRESTED WITH IGNATIUS LAWTON

Mr. Keane Was a Witness for Lawton, Who Is Accused of Swearing He Had Been Here Five Years Instead of Two

After having been found not guilty of making a false oath and signing a false registration paper in Cambridge, John J. Keane is held by the United States Court in connection with alleged fraudulent naturalization.

With Keane there is held Ignatius Lawton of Cambridge, who is charged with fraudulently obtaining naturalization papers. It is charged by the United States officials that Lawton made affidavit that he had been in this country five years when in reality he had only been here for two years. Keane was a witness for Lawton.

The Federal authorities were brought into the case through the arrest of fifteen men recently on the charge of being concerned in fraudulent registration in Cambridge during the famous McNamee and Daly contest for the mayoralty. Evidence against the fifteen was obtained by Police Sergeant Herbert Gordon. After he had arrested the men the charge was made in the Board of Aldermen that Gordon had frightened two witnesses into giving false testimony before the Grand Jury in the cases of Keane and James A. Montgomery, Superintendent of Parks in Cambridge.

Sergeant Gordon was tried before Mayor Daly on the charges, and, after a hearing, was found not guilty and went back to duty.

Twelve Pleaded Guilty.

The fifteen cases were brought before Judge Sherman in the Superior Court and twelve of the men promptly pleaded guilty. They were Dennis F. Hynes, Fred E. Thyng, John J. Morris, Martin F. Carew, John J. Keane, Lawrence H. Johnson, Thomas Daly, James T. Jordan, Joseph A. Beard, Samuel Rosenberg, James P. Crowley and James F. Cunniff. Keane pleaded guilty to one count only, and not guilty to that of signing the John Lavin paper.

Of these Morris, Hynes and Thyng were each sentenced to three months in the House of Correction, while Johnson and Daly were given thirty days. The rest of the cases were placed on file.

Montgomery and Keane were arraigned for alleged fraud in connection with the papers of John Lavin. During the trial Lavin told how he had been induced to give false testimony. Judge Sherman ordered both cases dismissed.

The arrest of the men caused trouble among the political parties in Cambridge, and the Democrats said that it was the work of the Non-partisans. It promised to be a bitter fight, but was ended when the men pleaded guilty.

Arrested Without Warrant.

During the trial Assistant United States District Attorney Lewis appeared on the scene investigating fraudulent naturalization. The first warrant he had sworn out and placed in the hands of the United States Marshal. Sergeant Gordon was informed of the existence of the warrant and arrested both men.

When Lawyer Daniel H. Coakley found Keane in custody at police headquarters in Cambridge, he asked Gordon:

"What did you arrest him for?"

"For the United States Marshal's office," replied Sergeant Gordon.

"Is he under arrest?" asked Mr. Coakley.

"He is being detained," replied the officer.

"What process did you use in arresting him? Did you have a warrant?"

"No, I didn't need any. I knew the Marshal's office had one, and I brought him in."

"Do you mean to tell me that you arrested this man without a warrant?" retorted Mr. Coakley. "You have no right to hold him like this."

Mr. Coakley turned to Keane. "John, he has no right to keep you here. I want you to walk out with me."

Keane started to leave. Gordon said: "John, you sit down."

"All right. That's what I want to know, whether you are being forcibly detained," said Mr. Coakley.

EDITH E. WON RACE FOR MOTOR BOATS

Lynn, July 8.—Lynn Yacht Club races this afternoon drew a large list of entries to compete for the prizes offered by the club. The second class motor boat races furnished plenty of excitement with a close finish, the Edith E., sailed by Fred Mank, scoring in record time. The Kazardy, Edward Winkley's crack auto boat, broke down after turning the first mark, where she was leading her rivals by a good distance.

General Miles Surrenders!

FAMOTS OLD INDIAN FIGHTER BECOMES REMINISCENT.

Compares His Position To-day as Commander in Mimic War With That of Former Days on the Plains in the West

By Eleanor Ames.

LATEST PICTURE OF GENERAL MILES IN CAMP AT WESTFIELD

Snapshot by Boston American Photographer.

Westfield, July 8.—General Miles, in command of the largest mobilization of troops ever on Massachusetts soil in time of peace, sat alone in his tent at Camp Bartlett.

It was a moment of comparative quiet. The call for mess had sounded and officers, men and guests had gathered in the various mess tents for the midday meal.

He sat motionless in the famous "Governor's rocking chair," his head thrown back, his palms outspread on the oaken arms.

In his lap lay the plans for the day's manoeuvres. On the table by his side flamed a huge bunch of burning scarlet poppies. Before his gaze the camp, with its tents of white and khaki spread itself along the valley, and beyond, toward the city and the hills. The fierce, glaring heat of midsumer fairly scorched the air, and toward the horizon lay a murky haze, which the optomistic interpreted to mean cooling showers at night.

Now and then a few straggling visitors wandered aimlessly up the hillside, their approach being heralded by a cloud of dust, which in its whiteness might have recalled the alkali of the southwestern plain in the old Indian campaigns. Opposite the General's tent they paused respectfully and peered through sun-blinded eyes at the solitary occupant.

"That's him," they said. "That's General Miles."

Then they dragged listlessly along, mopping their perspiring brows.

It was thus that I came upon him.

I had met him shortly after the mad automobile ride from the station had ended in my arrival at the camp. Then he had been busy, smiling, greeting with delightful cordiality a party of newcomers who stopped to salute him.

Too Busy for Interview.

He started as I approached the tent, and taking a pencil began rapidly making notes on the pad of paper which had lain in his lap.

"Very busy, General?" I asked.

He was courteous, but distant. "I am going to be in a few moments. What can I do for you?"

I said, "Interview," and the pencil commenced to move.

"Then, I'm very, very busy right now," he said. "I am so tired of being interviewed. They have written so much and such silly things about me. Many of them have been absolutely untrue."

However, he rose and designated a chair.

"Won't you be seated?" he said kindly.

I accepted and commenced to spar for time. To save my life I couldn't think of any one vital question to ask him.

"Some interviewers are silly," I began. "But I've never had a chance to interview you."

The pencil was not moving quite so rapidly. The wrinkles were gathering about the smiling eyes in an encouraging way.

Then General Miles stopped writing and looked at me a moment. The smile grew toward the dimensions of a laugh.

"That's true," he said, "you have never interviewed me. If you had I probably should feel more kindly toward other interviewers."

Wasn't that a charming way of putting it?

Besides the pencil was still.

"This is a beautiful camp," I hazarded.

"Very. I am most pleased with arrangements."

"Does it seem strange to be in command of so many troops on Massachusetts soil, and to know there will be no real fighting?"

"It seems pleasant. I am very fond of Massachusetts. It is my native State."

We looked across Hampton Plain toward the wooded hills, to Mt. Tekoa and Bald's Bluff.

"Not much like the old days of Indian warfare," I remarked.

"No, indeed," said the General. "And yet it was here in the Massachusetts colony, nearly 300 years ago, that Indian warfare started. It's been going on ever since," he mused.

I wondered how this greatest of all Indian fighters felt toward the red men, whom allegiance to his country has compelled him to conquer.

Exchanged Land for Eternity.

"I feel very sorry for the Indians," I said.

"So do I," he rejoined, his face growing serious, his voice deep in feeling. "I have a great deal of sympathy for them. They deserve sympathy. By right of eminent domain this great country was theirs. We have taken the land. We have given them the air and eternity."

There was silence for a moment.

"But I suppose it had to be," added the fighter.

"Tell me about the time you took Lame Deer and he tried to kill you," I begged.

He smiled again.

"Have you heard that story? It has been often misquoted. The truth was that after we had reached the point of treaty I went out to confer with Lame Deer. I rode up on my horse with an orderly. Lame Deer approached on foot. He was a splendid specimen, tall and straight and powerful. I reached down to shake hands with him and he gave me his hand and said 'How.'

"In some way my orderly made some motion with his gun, and Lame Deer, suspecting he was to be killed, withdrew his hand, threw aside his blanket, displaying the gun he was not supposed to have, and fired. I whirled my horse around and he settled back on his haunches just as the bullet whizzed by me, killing a soldier beyond me.

"It was my narrowest escape, and I don't believe I care for any narrower one. Lame Deer evidently thought that he was going to the happy hunting grounds and thought he might as well take my scalp as a trophy.

"Again, when meeting Sitting Bull, he and his followers intended to kill me. The Indians all had their short rifles under their blankets. We were meeting under a flag of truce, and I told them that unless they laid down their arms I would declare the truce off and my men would fire upon them.

"All the time I was talking to Sitting Bull he tried to have me sit beside him, but I remained standing. I felt safe and more comfortable."

"Of course you know there is some talk of setting Geronimo at liberty. You took him. You know him. What do you think of it?"

General Miles shook his head doubtfully.

"Where he is he can do no harm," he said. "Set him at liberty and he might be good, or his heart might go bad again."

Outlines Plans for Day.

Tersely, sharply, rapidly, as though giving orders, he sketched me the plans for the day.

It was relative to the army meeting the enemy, supposed to be encamped along the various hills. Several suppositious moves of the men were to be met and conquered if possible. One division after another was to be sent to the front, until finally the combined forces drove the enemy back.

In the meantime, from the side of Mt. Tom the heliograph was to flash its signals and automobiles were to fairly fly about carrying orders and scouting parties.

"The science of warfare has improved since the Indian days," said General Miles. "Every improvement helped us so much with the Indians. They are very superstitious and they believe that the Great Father specially favors the white man in letting him make the various discoveries.

"I remember the first time I explained the use of the telegraph and telephone to them. I took some of the strong men of the tribe to the tent, made everything dark, and told them that the Great Father had let the white man harness the lightning and with it he could talk 'way off, 'way to Washington. Then I showed them the sparks as the wires came together. They were amazed and afraid.

"They believed it was the lightning. Then I told them that by the same means we could talk with each other though miles away. So I left some of the Indians there and took the others to my house, nearly a mile distant, and let them talk through the telephone. They did in the Dakotah tongue, and they recognized the voices of their friends.

"So they laid the receiver down with trembling hands, while great beads of perspiration stood on their faces.

"'It is the Whispering Spirit,' they said. Everything they do not comprehend is a spirit with them.

"As a result they sent swift runners out in the field to tell the warriors to surrender, that it was no use, the white man had the lightning's spirit to help him!"

Miles Seemed Tireless.

I wondered how the automobiles would affect them, as in the skilful charge the three great steamers of the Auto Corps tore up hill and down dale, over stumps of trees and through sand, like true "devil wagons," annihilating distance and proving sturdy, trusty and useful.

"I am greatly interested in the part the motor car will play in the future of war," said General Miles. "I believe it will be more useful than we can foretell."

He had risen to his splendid soldierly height and was preparing to go forth to the battle field. His closely cropped gray head glistened in the sunlight. His step was alert, his bearing that of the truest, most ideal soldier. His face was growing stern, the relaxing smile was fading. The gray eyes were becoming the shrewd eyes of the trained fighter.

Outside the troops were forming. General Stopford was giving orders. The streets were becoming filled with soldiers. Mounted men dashed up and down shouting orders. Handsome General "Bill" Emery, who is responsible for the feeding of 6,500 hungry men and all the hungry visitors, strolled in and out of the various tents, giving orders receiving reports, greeting friends.

A [illegible] appeared with General Miles's horse. The General settled his [illegible] swung into the saddle and was dashing off toward Mt. Tom, the blue uniform of the regular army distinguishing him any distance among the olive and khaki uniforms which surrounded him.

And when the long hot afternoon had worn away and the smoke of the mimic battle had cleared, glowing with enthusiasm, he declared that he considered the day a success, and that he had thoroughly enjoyed it. And he looked as fresh and fit as when he entered the fray.

CHANCE HAS NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH

Chicago, July 8.—Chicago fans stand aghast to-day at the narrow escape from death which Captain Frank Chance of the Cubs had in the second game with Pittsburg to-day.

Chance was struck squarely on the left side of the head by a pitched ball thrown by Leever in the fourth inning, and he fell like a bullock that had been hit by a maul.

He was unconscious for several minutes. Dr. Parker, who attended him, said that had the ball struck an inch lower it would have killed Chance.

BURGLARS GET BOOTY OF $125

During the absence of the family, burglars entered the house of Emerson Batcheder, No. 11 Austin street, Somerville, and secured jewelry and money to the value of $125. Entrance to the house was gained by means of false keys.

Two gold watches and chains, a gentleman's gold ring, a gold stickpin, a pair of cuffbuttons and $12 in money is a list of articles taken.

POLITICS WAITS FOR COOLER WEATHER.

Democratic City Organization and the Opposition Content to Wait Until September Before Opening the Battle

MEANWHILE NO WORD FROM MAYOR COLLINS

Neither the Democratic city organization nor its opponents desire to start an early municipal campaign. While both the Collins and Fitzgerald factions will do a little fence repairing and other preliminary stunts, it will be September before there is real serious business in the choosing of the leading candidates for municipal office.

This is the finding reached after a general canvass of the situation in an endeavor to ascertain the cause for the apparent lethargy in local political circles. Leading men of both factions seen by the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter all agree that there is no disposition by the leaders to force the issue at this time, although the reasons for the truce differ in some respects.

Without quoting individual expressions, the position of the organization, or as its opponents call it, the city machine, is one of general complacency. The leaders do not appear at all alarmed over the situation, but are content to watch closely the trend of things until cooler weather shall make strenuous action a necessity.

They are proceeding on the idea that Mayor Collins will again be a candidate and will so act until they know to the contrary. They say the Mayor never has said he was a candidate for the office again. If, however, he does not run again they are assured that the Mayor will at the proper time declare himself out of the race.

"No Second Choice."

What the Mayor considers the proper time the leaders say they know not, but they are satisfied that General Collins will not delay to such an extent as to injure the prospects of the men who have stood with him in former campaigns and in the conduct of the affairs of the city during his four years of service.

If the Mayor shall, at some future time, probably not before September, if at all, declare that he will not run again then the organization will suggest the candidate and expects that the choice will be approved by the rank and file of the party. Should the Mayor decide not to run the present ward leaders will be called together and from them will come the choice of the candidate.

With this program outlined the organization leaders say they are not at all apprehensive of the outcome as they are confident no individual ambition, even with a good personal following, can overcome the representatives of the voters forming the ward committees.

"Until Collins has spoken we have no second choice," was the expression of every one seen.

Too Hot for Politics.

The opponents of the organization, made up of many different interests and scattered over the city in varying strength, also appear waiting for the word of some leader to begin an active campaign. Hon. John F. Fitzgerald, who is always to the front as an unfrank[illegible] candidate for mayor, was out of the city when the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter called yesterday, but his brother, Henry S. Fitzgerald, and other lieutenants were found during the day, and all declared it was too hot to talk or play politics just now. "It is too early yet," was the way they put it.

The concensus of opinion expressed by the Fitzgerald following was that at the proper time Ex-Congressman Fitzgerald would speak, and that from that moment there would be waged an active and aggressive campaign against the men and methods of the dominant faction of the party.

No one would express the least doubt as to the ability of Fitzgerald to win the nomination and the only question asked, almost an invariable one, was: "Will Collins run again?" There seems no doubt in the minds of these men as to the candidacy of the ex-Congressman, the only doubt was as to who would run against him.

The Fitzgerald followers and lieutenants are firmly of the opinion that the present organization of the Democratic party in the city does not represent the voters of the party; that it is held together by the office holders and those in the pay of the city, and that as soon as the voters get a chance to express themselves this will be demonstrated. This demonstration is expected by them to nominate Fitzgerald for mayor.

RECORD FIELD IN ESSEX COUNTY GOLF

Special to the Sunday American.

Manchester, Mass., July 8.—To-day's excellent golfing weather brought out the largest field of the season in the members' handicap competition at the Essex County Club links. General Adelbert Ames of Lowell captured first honors, netting 78, with a handicap of 18. George H. Crocker and Thayer McMillan, the crack Yale player, broke even for the best gross score, each turning in cards for 85.

Mr. McMillan turned in one of the best cards of the season this afternoon, coming in in thirty-nine strokes, which is one better than bogey. In the morning, however, he was rather erratic, thus bringing his total up. The summary:

| Name. | Gross. | H'cap. | Net. |
|---|---|---|---|
| A. Ames | [illegible] | 18 | [illegible] |
| S. S. Stevens, Jr. | 97 | 15 | 82 |

ARCHITECTS TOUR THE PARK SYSTEM

Twenty members of the American Society of Landscape Architects yesterday visited the Back Bay Fens, the Riverway and Olmstead Park and the office of the Boston Park system at Jamaica Pond on foot and rode around the pond, through the Arborway and the Arnold Arboretum.

The party dined at the Somerset Hotel, after which there was a lecture by Professor Frederick Law Olmstead, Jr.

TENTS BLOWN DOWN DURING EVENING PARADE.

Camp Bartlett, Hampton Plains, July 8.—During evening parade, for which an immense crowd of visitors assembled, a terrific thunder storm struck the camp of the State troops. In a few moments the entire field was [illegible]. Tents were struck by lightning and levelled. The telephone service was put out of business temporarily.

Adjutant General [illegible] Stopford's quarters, where [illegible] two [illegible] was struck. No one was [illegible].

Owing to the fact that there was little shelter near many of the visitors who were on the parade ground were badly frightened by the storm. Every one of them was drenched before [illegible] of thunder seemed to strike the ground.

The troops [illegible]

Miles Pleased at Grit.

When the rain finally abated the parade [illegible] as if nothing had happened to interfere and the soldiers returned to their quarters to build camp fires that they might get dried out. General Miles witnessed the work of the troops during and after the storm from the shelter of the marquee and expressed himself as pleased at the grit shown by them.

In anticipation of some little excitement on account of this being the first Saturday night in town an extra detail [illegible] was sent to assist the police in [illegible].

Work All the Time.

[illegible] morning, afternoon and evening [illegible] the heat of midday and in the shade of twilight there has been [illegible] doing all the time. Drilling, manœuvering, there has been little rest for officers or men. The [illegible] has been anxious to make the most of the opportunity, the regimental [illegible] inspired with the [illegible] even if there had been a [illegible] things [illegible] [illegible] features [illegible] work to keep pace [illegible].

The weather was scorching hot most of the time and the [illegible] cavalry have kept [illegible] General Miles says he is well pleased with the results shown so far. "I really did not expect that things would run so smoothly as they have," he said. "I think the work done Friday afternoon was really remarkable under the circumstances. The men did their part with the style of regulars, and I was impressed with the way it was done. Monday and Tuesday will come the problems and through them may be demonstrated interesting features of war."

Popular Men in Camp.

Until the arrival of Governor Douglas and his party all the talk had been war talk in camp. With their coming political talk was injected. At the reception to the Governor at the home of Henry W. Ely, in Westfield, a number of the leading men of the western section of the State urged him to again be a candidate for Governor, but received little encouragement from him.

And Councillor Sullivan of South Boston had a serious talk with friends over the advisability of announcing his intention of running for Congress against William S. McNary.

The most popular officer at the camp is Judge Advocate-General Charles W. Bartlett of Boston. The most dashing is Colonel Charles H. Cole of Boston. The handsomest is Major Robert J. Crowley of [illegible] [illegible] Major Patrick F. O'Keefe of Boston. Every day General Bartlett is the centre of a group of story tellers on the kopje and he does most of the story telling. His rehearsal of famous [illegible] his description of people and places in this [illegible] and his fund of rich anecdotes of famous [illegible] are the finest ever. He is delighted with the camp [illegible] believes that General Miles has shown great ability in handling the situation. General Bartlett is one of those who believe the State should make Camp Bartlett the scene of the annual encampment, and that the work of instruction, so well begun, should be continued.

Good Story on Major O'Keefe.

"The most ambitious man I ever saw in war is Major O'Keefe," says the General, "and he is also the man of most rapid advancement that I have ever seen. Why, he changed his clothes, and in doing it elevated himself from major to general. It happened in this way: When the Major had dressed up in his best he placed on the first cap he could lay his hands on. It happened to be mine. And, as I said, he started out a major and came back a brigadier. I had to borrow a cap from a motorman. The funny thing is, my hat is a couple of sizes larger than the Major's, and I can't see for the life of me how he could wear it comfortably."

The West Point officers here are strong in their praise of the good work that has been done, and admit it has proved instructive to them in more ways than one.

Dr. Ruker, in charge of the Marine Hospital at Chelsea, strongly favors the camp and the work that has been done here. After making a very careful inspection he reports that, from the sanitary viewpoint, it is ideal.

Lieutenant Charles Daly of Boston came to camp this afternoon and is being well cared for by old friends.

Mr. Williams sails from Havana on the steamship Monterey on July 11, and is due to arrive in New York on the morning of the 15th. He will then come directly to Boston by train.

DROWNING LAD GETS STRANGLE HOLD ON COP.

After a desperate spurt along Freeport Street Beach, [illegible] yesterday afternoon, Patrolman [illegible] O'Brien of [illegible] station [illegible] float [illegible] Ryan [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] officer [illegible]

Young Ryan [illegible] some other lads to the float, a hundred yards up the beach. The [illegible] dived off the float and [illegible] dived [illegible] then began to drown. He went down twice, screaming.

The older boys seemed afraid to go near him, he struggled so. But they yelled till Patrolman O'Brien heard them. O'Brien jumped up and, heavy as he was and hot as the weather was, sped up the beach like a streak and went off the float into the water where Ryan had just gone under the third time. He got a grip on Ryan, and then the drowning lad got a strangle hold on O'Brien neck which nearly ended both of them.

But O'Brien rose to the surface and holding the lad quiet by main strength lifted him on to the float. Then he rolled Ryan about [illegible] water out of [illegible] the boy was able to walk sent him [illegible] in charge of some older companion.

O'Brien modestly refrained from making any report at the station but the beach [illegible] and finally O'Brien, [illegible] the water. [illegible] farther away than O'Brien from the float, says.

If O'Brien hadn't run like a deer he wouldn't have got there [illegible].

NO MORE SUNDAY PHOTOS AT BEACH

AUTOS TO RACE UP MT. WASHINGTON IN "CLIMB TO CLOUDS"

THE greatest fortnight of automobiling ever seen in New England will begin on Tuesday when fifty cars will leave New York for Mt. Washington in competition for the Glidden $2,000 trophy. Arriving at Mt Washington the tourists will witness the "climb to the clouds," a race against time from Bretton's Woods to the summit of the mountain, distance about eight miles. The "tour" and "climb" are two distinct events, but in a way they merge into one. After the climbing contest, the Glidden trophy tourists will return to New York, having covered 1,000 miles, according to the terms of the deed of gift.

All roads for the autoists this week will lead to Mt. Washington when that highest eminence among New Hampshire's hills will be assailed by the intrepid drivers of the "choo-choo" cars in trials against time.

The "climb to the clouds" is aptly applied to the occasion as the miles of steady ascent takes the individual from the base of the famous mountain to a height above the clouds.

Last year Harry Harkness, the millionaire racing man, made the most remarkable time of twenty-four minutes and thirty-seven and three-fifths seconds in the ascent and performed it after driving from New York and without taking any rest for preparation or getting acquainted with the path.

Harkness Not in It.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Harkness will be unable to contest this year as he is confident that he can do better than the fastest time made a year ago by himself.

But there will be others who are likely to shatter the mark set by Harkness as the field entered is composed of some of the most noted men who ever steered the flying vehicles.

The first events will be held next Saturday and will continue till July 20 before the entire program of races is finished.

All over the country this mountain climb is recognized as one of the most important events in motoring and is classed with the James Gordon Bennett, Vanderbilt and Ormond races. No other ascent in the country outside of Pike's Peak can offer the attractions in the hill climbing line and the conditions are the best ever for the test in view.

Entry List is Big.

The entries promise to exceed in numbers and quality those of last year, which was the first time that the contest had taken place.

Many specially built machines will be brought out constructed for record breaking feats.

There will be many classes compete and all kinds of cars of different makes and powers will be in line to scorch up the mountain side.

Among the entries will be William Hilliard, who won the Bay State Automobile Association championship and has done excellent work with his Napier car originally constructed for the James Gordon Bennett race, and F. E. Stanley, who made a meritorious climb last year, will have a powerfully built steam car. Paul Satori will drive Alfred Gynne Vanderbilt's Fiat Italian racer, which has made phenomenal time on the track.

Eddie Bald Tuning Up.

Eddie Bald and Hiram Maxim are tuning up their Columbia cars for the big effort up the height, while A. E. Morrison has got his Peerless in fine shape. Mr Morrison did some fast going last year and got several records for different cars and he is anxious to do even better this year.

J. I. Phelps, who has the distinction of establishing the first mountain record is another who is preparing to be in the running, and Otto Nestman, who was one of the early record breakers, will be on hand this season. W. J. Foss is getting his Pope Toledo ready for the fray, and George Soules will probably handle the steering wheel. E. A. Gilmore will have some high class Ramblers in the competition, while George E. Lowe and Webb Jay expect to annihilate time and space with some swift White steamers.

Roadbed Has Been Fixed.

The roadbed has been fixed up especially for the speeders and will be much improved over last season, when there were many difficulties encountered in the way of rough roading.

A gang of men have made the grades more accessible and narrow places have been widened while the surface has received attention over the entire distance.

All around the mountain where [illegible] is available special stress has been laid on conditioning the roads and there is nothing left to be desired in this direction.

Several of the leading automobile clubs have planned runs to the mountain at the time of the race meet and many will rendezvous at the Intervale and Bretton Woods at the southern gateway to the mountain district and pleasant tours will be taken.

Noted Officials Chosen.

The officials selected to take charge of the races are as follows. Honorary referee, Robert Lee Morrill, chairman of the Racing Board of the A. A. U. of New York; referee, A. R. Pardington, ex-chairman of the A. A. U. Racing Board, Brooklyn; judges, Charles J. Glidden, Lewis R. Speares, Harlan W. Whipple, ex president A. A. A.

The fact that this may be the last time the autoists may be able to have their climb [illegible] the sale of the mountain [illegible] the ownership of its wooded slopes, is likely to be a consideration to make this occasion the last of its kind.

The object of the company which has secured the land will make it necessary to use the road leading to the top and make it impractical for automobile driving.

Fifty Cars to Tour 1,000 Miles for Glidden Trophy

Motor touring in this country is yet in its infancy, but the pioneer of that side of the sport on wheels is Charles J. Glidden, a Massachusetts man who is worldly known for his trips around the globe.

It was left for Mr. Glidden to inaugurate what is known as the Glidden trophy tour, which begins next Tuesday at New York and proceeds to Boston, thence to the White Mountains, and back again to the Metropolis by a different route.

The distance covered is something over a thousand miles, and the time consumed will be a whole week actual travelling. An extended stay will be made in the mountain region for the benefit of witnessing the "climb to the clouds" and side tours for members of the party.

St. Louis Tour Started It.

What prompted Mr. Glidden in the movement toward establishing an annual tour, for which he has contributed a $2,000 trophy, was the tour taken last Summer to St Louis. He saw the possibilities of such an event every year on a more extended scale and set to work to organize one.

Mr. Glidden proposed at the exposition, when the tour ended, the idea he had in mind and announced his opinion, which has materialized and will take place for the first time this week.

While Mr. Glidden is the donor of the trophy, the tour will be run under the auspices of the American Automobile Association. A member of any American motor club affiliated with the association or of any club in the world recognized by it might be a competitor.

Distance Covered 1,000 Miles.

The club of which the winner is a member shall have the custody of the trophy until it is won by another. The distance to be driven shall not be less than 1,000 miles, nor less than 500 miles weekly, and shall be over regularly used highways in the country where the holding club is located, except in the years 1905, 1906 and 1907, when the contest shall be held either in the United States or Canada, or both.

The car shall be driven by the owner or a driver approved by the touring committee, the owner being a passenger in the car.

The conditions as laid out by the committee for the first tour is as follows: Cars shall be privileged to start each morning between 6 o'clock and 10 o'clock, but neither before nor after the hours designated, except with a penalty of a discredit mark. Each car, to retain a perfect score, must register before 9 o'clock each night stop, and on arrival must take its place immediately behind the car in front until it can be properly registered.

Professionals Eliminated.

At the conclusion of the tour the duly qualified owners whose cars have finished the tour and complied with all the conditions thereof will be asked to name by ballot the three competitors who, in their opinion, have accomplished the best all-round touring, and submit the same to the commission appointed under the deed of gift. This information will be used by the commission in deciding the winner.

In order to be eligible to vote entrants must have completed the entire route and registered at each night stop, and fulfilled all other conditions asked by the committee.

Mr. Glidden's Fine Trophy.

There never was such an elaborate trophy offered in any kind of auto competition as the one which Mr. Glidden has had designed for the tour, and is one of the finest works of art ever gotten out by Tiffeny. It stands over four feet in height and makes a magnificent display when on exhibition.

The design calls for a sterling silver globe eighteen inches in diameter representing the world supported on a pedestal composed of the two terminal figures back to back, conveying the idea of the Eastern and Western Hemispheres.

The wings support the globe, which turning on axis will be etched and enamelled to distinguish the water from the land, with the principal cities and countries correctly disposed about the sphere.

The height, including the small model of automobile at the apex in which is reposed a sprig of laurel, will be fifty inches, and the whole weight of silver used is 400 ounces.

CLIMB TO THE CLOUDS.

Scene of race—Mt. Washington.
Length of road—About eight miles.
Record for climb—24 minutes 37 3-5 seconds.
Record holder—Harry Harkness of New York.
Start of race—Bretton's Woods, Saturday, July 15
Finish of race—Top of Mt. Washington.

GLIDDEN TROPHY TOUR.

Starting point—New York on Tuesday.
Finishing point—New York on July 22.
Distance covered—One thousand miles.
Route—To White Mountains and return.

PURPOSES OF THE GLIDDEN TOUR TOLD BY THE DONOR OF THE $2,000 TROPHY

BY CHARLES J. GLIDDEN.

I believe that touring will be the chief form of motoring the more extensively the automobile is used, and for that reason I was impressed with the thought that a suitable trophy would act as a stimulus to advance this class of recreation.

As the James Gordon Bennett race is the event in the racing world for automobiles, it seemed proper that there should be something of parallel interest in the touring line.

While the tour which will be inaugurated next Tuesday, starting from New York, is in the form of a competition, it differs in many ways from regular events of the same nature, as the cars will be driven by their owners or drivers nominated by them, and only the amateur element will be involved.

The idea is to furnish a means whereby the automobilists may enjoy the best method of seeing the country under advantages which can only be obtained by use of the motor car.

FIFTY CARS WILL START FROM NEW YORK.

In all probability there will be fifty cars start from New York, with an average of three people to a car, and this number will be swelled on arrival in Boston to the number of 250 people

It will be the largest touring party that ever travelled over the road of any country en masse by automobile.

Those starting from this city will not be eligible to compete for the trophy, New York being the starting and finishing point.

The arrangement for the tour is in the hands of an efficient committee, of which Augustus Post, chairman of the touring committee of the American Automobile Association, is at the head, ably assisted by Messrs. A. B. Tucker and W. O. Downs, and I am satisfied that it will be a grand success and an incentive for more extended tours in years to come.

PICTURESQUE ROUTE ALL THE WAY.

The route runs through what is considered the most enjoyable section in America, where interesting seashore and mountain scenery will be equally divided, and the committee has arranged that the tourists may be at the scene of the hill-climbing contest on Mount Washington July 17 and 18.

There will be many points of value that an owner will learn about his own car on the mountain grades and levels of the seashore, in addition to the benefit of fresh air and sightseeing.

The factor of an endurance test will come into consideration, and a better opportunity could not be offered the tourists than touring the distance, 1,000 miles, under the conditions stipulated.

NO ATTEMPT AT SPEEDING.

There will be no attempt at speeding, as the object of the tour is not to learn how fast a car can travel, but to allow the driver to bring out the merits of the automobile while he enjoys the beauties of rural scenery which the roads of New England afford. With the pleasant social conditions combined, I believe the tour will develop many features of excellence that will be recognized by the automobile world.

The trophy is now on exhibition in the windows of Shreve, Crump & Low Company, on Tremont street.

At the request of the committee, I will, at Bretton Woods on July 15, endeavor to entertain the tourists with a lecture on my tour of the world, more particularly that in the southern hemisphere, illustrated with 265 views taken en route.

Boston Yachts to Cruise Along the Maine Coast

Great interest is being shown in the annual cruise of the Boston Yacht Club which will take place July 15 to 21. The trip this year, as last, will be to Five Islands, Sheepscott's Bay, Maine, where the club members will be the guests of Vice Commodore F. P. Boynton. It is expected that every yacht in the fleet will take in the run this year and elaborate arrangements are being made.

The Portland and Kennebec Yacht Club boats will join the Boston fleet on the cruise, and this, of course, will add much to the interest of the event.

The port to port runs will be shorter than last year, so that yachts of all sizes can participate with comfort. Every effort will be made to make the cruise an enjoyable one. Handicaps for port to port runs and the race in Sheepscott's Bay will be arranged by the regatta committee.

The itinerary is as follows: Saturday, July 15, fleet will sail at 2 15 p. m. for Gloucester; Sunday, July 16, Gloucester to Portsmouth; Monday, July 17, Portsmouth to Portland; Tuesday, July 18, Portland to Bath; Wednesday, July 19, at Bath; Thursday, July 20, Bath to Five Islands; Friday, July 21, at Five Islands; Saturday, July 22, fleet disbands.

Suitable prizes will be awarded to winning yachts in port to port runs in the classes specified by the Regatta Committee. Another new feature of the cruise this year, which will add greatly to the comfort of those participating, will be the tugboat which will follow the fleet and tow into ports the yachts, on account of lack of wind or other reasons. This arrangement will assure all yachts arriving in port at a seasonable hour.

By invitation of J. Fred Harvey the club members will be his guests at the Hotel Wentworth, Newcastle, N. H., Sunday evening, July 16, for supper, followed by a concert.

At Portland the members will be the guests of the Portland Yacht Club. Entertainment will be provided in Portland Yacht Club house in the evening.

The Kennebec Yacht Club has made arrangements to tow the fleet from the mouth of the Kennebec to Bath and return. At Bath the members will be the guests of the Kennebec Yacht Club. New Meadows Inn has been engaged for the day by the Kennebec Yacht Club, where they will receive members of the Boston Yacht Club, followed in the evening by an entertainment at the club house of the Kennebec Yacht Club.

It is expected that the fleet will arrive at Five Islands on the afternoon of Thursday, July 20. At 6 o'clock a fish dinner will be served in the Casino and all hands are invited as the guests of the vice commodore. Yachtsmen's ball [illegible] the skating rink at 8 o'clock.

Phillies Take Their Third Straight From the Tenneyites After Hard Struggle.

When Hugh Duffy batted for Pittenger in the ninth, at the South End Grounds yesterday, after one was down, he was given a hand by the fans all over the park that must have satisfied him that he is as much a Hub favorite as ever.

Duffy responded to the ovation extended him by lacing the ball to far left for a single, which advanced Dooin, who had previously gotten a scratch hit to third. A minute later the score was tied.

Then the fans jumped up in their seats and cheered Duffy to the echo. One could hardly believe that Boston fandom was so nonpartisan.

This safety of Duffy's was the beginning of the end for Boston, as in the next inning, through some hard hitting and errors by the Boston team, the Quakers were able to tally again, winning the game, 4 to 3.

This makes the third straight game in the present series that Duffy's team has won from the Boston Nationals. The other two games were won in somewhat the same fashion, viz—batting rallies at the end of the game.

Pittenger Was in the Box.

In the pitching department it was Greek against Greek. Pittenger, who was regarded as the star pitcher of the locals last season, was on the firing line for the visitors. He worked like a Trojan to whip his former team mates.

"Old Pitt" allowed the Tenneyites but five hits in the time he was in the box. Two of these came in the third inning, when the Bostons scored the first two runs of the contest.

After Duffy had swatted for him in the ninth Pittenger had to go away back and sit down, while Sparks took his place on the firing line. Sparks, although he went in the box without a warming up, allowed the Hubites but one lone hit.

Vic Willis was in the points for the local bunch. He kept his hits well scattered, and had he only been accorded perfect support he would have romped away with the laurels.

Willis Only Issued One Pass.

Willis was complete master over the elusive sphere, and only one pass did he issue during the entire ten innings, and that was to Magee, who was hit in the head by a fierce inshoot in the eighth.

Philadelphia made eleven hits, but most of them were very scratchy. Boston only made six hits, but they were clean as a whistle.

"Cozy" Dolan carried off the batting honors for the Hubites with three singles. Willis was a close second with a single and a double, which was the longest hit of the day. Titus did the best hitting for the Slowtowners.

There threatened to be a riot precipitated in the earlier part of the game, when Umpire Kelm, who leaped into publicity Friday, by his inimitable umpiring, gave some decisions which would have tried the patience of Job.

When Keim put Batty out of the game in the fifth for disputing a decision, the crowd jeered him until cold chills ran races up and down his spinal column.

Game Interesting Throughout.

To get back to the game proper. The battle was interesting throughout, as it was nip and tuck all the way. When the Bostons grasped the lead in the third, pandemonium broke loose. However, in the next inning, the Quakers, not to be outdone, manufactured a brace of runs.

Boston jumped back into the lead in the sixth, and it looked as though the team would maintain it until the end, but Hugh Duffy put on his batting shoes and showed his charges the way to victory.

Despite the sweltering heat the fans became very enthusiastic at times and cheered lustily. Every one divested his coat and hat, while many essayed to drive perspiration from their brows by using fans. Toward the close of the game the fans threw their palm leafs upon the diamond in honor of Mr. Keim.

Raymer Slipped to First.

In the third, Raymer got slipped to first. Moran flied to centre. Willis doubled to left, Raymer going to third. Batty fanned. Tenney walked, filling the sacks. Then Dolan came to time by cracking out a corking single to centre, scoring Raymer and Willis. Del[illegible] flied to Gleason.

Magee scratched a hit to short, and stole second. Bransfield followed with a single to left. Lauterborn made a bungle of Kruger's liff and Magee scored. Bransfield scored on Dooin's out. Pittenger and Thomas were martyrs to the cause.

With one down, Cannell made first, when Bransfield dropped Courtney's throw. "Rip" made third on Dooin's wild throw to catch him stealing. Kruger fumbled Raymer's ground shot, Cannell scoring. Moran hit to short, and was doubled with Raymer.

The Phillies tied the score in the ninth. Kruger fanned and Dooin's scratch hit just glazed Willis's hand. Duffy followed with a cracking single. Thomas hit to Willis, who caught Dooin off third. Gleason's timely single scored Duffy.

In the tenth, Titus singled and Magee sacrificed him to second. Lauterborn juggled Bransfield's grounder and Titus went to third. Kruger flied to Dolan, who threw wild to the plate, Titus scoring. Dooin flied to Cannell. Boston wasn't able to do anything in their half. Score:

ST. LOUIS, 6, CINCINNATI, 3.

Cincinnati, July 8.—Bunched hits, Harper's wildness and wild throws by Steinfeldt enabled the Cardinals to beat the Reds to-day. Sebring's record batting—two triples and a double—was the feature. Smoot made two triples. In the first Clarke and Shannon beat out infield taps, but the former was caught asleep off second. Smoot tripled to centre, scoring Shannon, but was caught at the plate himself. The Reds took the lead in the second on consecutive triples by Corcoran and Sebring and Steinfeldt's single. Huggins's single, Barry's sacrifice and Seymour's single scored one in the third. St. Louis scored in the fourth on a pass and Steinfeldt's three-base wild throw. Triples by Clarke and Smoot put St. Louis ahead in the sixth. Score:

THE RUBE FIRST TO FINISH IN QUINCY YACHT CLUB RACE.

H. L. Bowden's Crack Twenty-two Footer Had Rather an Easy Time of It in Class E at Hough's Neck

Never in the history of the Quincy Yacht Club have such close finishes characterized their races as those of yesterday afternoon. With a steady southwest wind, the yachts in four classes went over the course in almost record time, and in three of the four events the finishes were of the hair-raising order.

The feature race of the afternoon was that for twenty-two footers—Class E, as it was signified on the programme. The finish in this race, while not so close as in the other three events, was a good one—or rather the race to the last turn was a good one—for from that place to the passing of the judges boat, H. L. Bowden's Rube gained a lead of two minutes on the Nutmeg, A. C. Jones's fast yacht, which secured second prize.

W. H. Joyce's Tyro was close behind the Nutmeg, while Chewink V., owned by George Macomb, was but a few seconds in the rear of the Tyro. Clorinda, owned by Cheney and Lanning, showed the way to George Lee's Medric, the latter being disabled before the finish line was reached.

Hayseed Beaten.

After leading for over four-fifths of the way, H. L. Bowden's Hayseed had to give way to the crack eighteen-footer, Bonitwo, owned by G. H. Wightman, in class 1. But a second astern of the Hayseed was the Dorchen, belonging to A. W. Finlay. Two seconds later the Aladdin crossed the line, with G. P. Keith at the "wheel," to be followed less than a minute afterwards by J. W. Olmstead's Mirage II. Moslem I., the property of John Tyler, was seventh, crossing the line five minutes ahead of Little Miss, owned by B. S. Perman, which brought up the tail end of the race.

When George Foster's Zaza II. crossed the line a half minute ahead of Bessie A., owned by A. J. Hodge, the crowd on the clubhouse veranda let loose a rousing cheer. It was a popular victory. From the beginning to the end this race for dories, Class X, as it read on the programme, was hard fought, and not until the Zaza II. had crossed the line was it possible to pick the winner.

A trifle over a minute after the Bessie A. had completed her journey the crack dorie Elizabeth F., owned by H. W. Dudley, flashed past the judges' boat, to be followed forty seconds later by W. J. Tetley's Freak. Bugaboo II., belonging to H. B. Ingalls, was fifth, showing the "foam" to the Spray and Kiaki II., respectively.

Marvel Leads the Cats.

Marvel, owned by T. M. Whittimore, is certainly a slick cat boat for the manner in which she won Class D—a race for Cape cat boats, was nothing short of wonderful. The cat boat Hustler, sailed by H. W. Robbins, led for three quarters of the distance, but had to give way to the Marvel after the last turn for the stretch home. F. E. Dawes' Stranger came strong also in the final stretch and, according to the corrected time, secured a tie with the Hustler.

CUSHING A. A., 19; WEST NEWTON, 7.

West Newton suffered its first defeat of the season at the hands of Cushing A. A., of Norwood, yesterday afternoon at the former's grounds, by a score of 19 to 7.

Artful Home First in Rich Brighton Handicap

BRIGHTON BEACH RACE TRACK, July 8.—They used to call August Belmont's Beldame the queen of the turf. Her reign ended to-day. Artful, Harry Payne Whitney's fleet three-year-old daughter of Hamburg, snatched away the crown of the daughter of Octagon and scampered off with it.

The way in which Artful won the $25,000 Brighton handicap made the $25,000 spectators at the pretty Brighton track hold their breath. Besides dethroning Beldame and leaving her far in the rear, she defeated John A. Drake's Ort Wells most decisively and left four other fleet thoroughbreds far in the rear.

Artful was at 11 to 5, while Ort Wells was played down to 7 to 5. He, however, was plunged on by the big bettors. The half holiday crowd had down its dollars upon the pride of Harry Payne Whitney's barn. John A. Drake and John W. Gates were responsible for the short price upon Ort Wells.

The Drake stable sent in a tremendous commission on its horse, while Mr. Gates almost bet a million or bet almost a million—upon the four-year-old big Eric colt, which had beaten Beldame with such ease only a few days previously in the Brighton mile.

Some of the shrewd followers of the races thought that the Drake pride, after travelling that route, with 136 pounds up, in 1.38¾, and finishing strong, would come like a Twentieth Century Limited at the finish of the Brighton handicap, and overtake Artful. But other shrewd bettors, and as it turned out, better handicappers of guessers, felt that Artful could sustain her marvellous speed for the journey, and she did.

The crowd was not as big as the one that saw Broomstick break the world's record on the same track and in the same race last year. Nor was it as big as the throng that cheered Waterboy when he romped home two years ago. The grand stand was not so full [illegible]. Over in the [illegible], however, where one is only charged $1 to obtain admittance, human beings were packed like sardines.

The Results.

First race—[illegible] about two miles—Jim Newman, 144 (Ray), 5 to 1 and 8 to 5, won; [illegible], 2 to 1 and 4 to 5, second; Ope[illegible], 140 ([illegible]), 20 to 1 and 6 to 1, third. Time—4.28. [illegible] and Champ Hughes, Faulkner [illegible] Messina also ran.

FINE BREEZE FOR COHASSET Y. C. RACES

Special to the Sunday American.

Cohasset, July 8.—A good southwest breeze and plenty of entries served to give the proper conditions for good sport for the members of the Cohasset Yacht Club this afternoon. In the twenty-one foot knockabout class Fly won over Fancy, beating her by one minute and forty seconds. Both are owned by F. W. Baron. There were ten entries in the seventeen-foot class. Tortoise, owned by F. J. Moors, was first, with Pipin, owned by Alanson Bigelow, Jr., a close second. The ten boats all finished within two minutes of each other. The handicap race was won by Aztec, owned by Albert Burrage. Dorothy, owned by Douglas Lawson, was second.

WASHINGTON 6; VERNONS 5

Worcester, Mass., July 8.—The Washington baseball team defeated the Vernon A. A. team on the Crompton Park diamond this afternoon by the score of 6 to 5. The feature of the game was the fine all round work of the winners and the catch of a hard fly by Thomas Coney, left fielder of the losing team. The score by innings:

HYLAN BEAT WILDER IN 'SCHOLASTIC GOLF TOURNEY.

Lowell Textile School Player Was in the Grandest of Form, Winning His Match by a Score of One Up

In the most successful tournament ever held under the auspices of the Boston Interscholastic Golf Association, from the standpoint of general excellence of the golf produced, John B. Hylan of the Lowell Textile School defeated H. H. Wilder of the Lowell High School in the championship match at thirty-six holes by the score of one up.

The final contest was a ding dong match, as at no point was either of these two foremost school players in the State any great distance from the other. To the turn of the match their going was not up to the standard expected from them, but in the afternoon their golf was of a sensational character.

In the consolation division Richard Kimball of Brookline High won first honors, defeating A. Sweeney of Andover, one up, thirty-seven holes. Sweeney's golf in the afternoon round was equally brilliant as that of the championship match.

YACHTS OF EASTERN CLUB START ON CRUISE.

Fine Weather and Good Breeze for the First Run from Marblehead to Gloucester—New Boats Attract Much Attention

Special to the Sunday American.

Gloucester, July 8.—The fleet of the Eastern Yacht Club, which started this afternoon on the annual cruise along the coast of Maine, arrived here this evening.

Bright, warm July weather greeted the yachtsmen as they steered their boats out of Marblehead Harbor, and the fairly strong southwest breeze which blowed was all that was necessary to complete the conditions that the yachtsmen wished for.

At 3 o'clock sharp the tug that was stationed outside the harbor blew the warning too, and the first class of starters filed away for Gloucester, where the club remains to-night.

Among starters in the schooner class was the Chanticleer, owned by John F. Harris of Chicago, which is supposed to be a dangerous boat in [illegible].

Also notable among the starters in the class for sloops and yawls was the new Herreshoff fifty-six foot [illegible] boat, the Doris.

To-night there was entertaining and visiting among the various yachts, and the next run will be made for the Isles of Shoals.

Everything worked smoothly on the run to this port and it was made without accident and in good time, and in the class for schooners the Corona, owned by Arthur F. Luke, won over the Chanticleer.

In the class for sloops and yawls the Doris, the new Herreshoff boat, was first with the W[illegible], also a Herreshoff boat, second.

PIONEERS ARE BEATEN.

Peabody, July 8.—The St. Johns defeated the Pioneers of the Oceanside League, on the fair grounds this afternoon in a game replete with fast playing. The contest was close and exciting throughout, but the batting of the St. Johns in the eighth secured the winning run. Shea, Kiley and O'Brien of the St. Johns gave excellent exhibitions of fast infield work. The score:

| | | | | | | | | | | |
| St. Johns | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 1 | 1 | —3? |
| Pioneers | 0 | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | —1 |

ROXBURY, 5; SOUTH BOSTON A. A., 4.

By securing four runs in the last inning the fast gaited Roxburys defeated the South Boston A. A. yesterday afternoon by a score of 5 to 4.

BROTHERS OPPONENTS.

Malden, July 8.—Corona Kid defeated the Malden Independents on Ferryway Green this afternoon, 4 to 4. "Spike" and Fred Gatcomb, two brothers, were opposed each other in the box, and had a great pitchers' battle. Fred Gatcomb of the Corona team had [illegible] strikeouts and five hits made off his delivery, while his brother, "Spike," got seven strikeouts and allowed only three hits. The score.

LIGHT WENT IN THE AIR.

Reading, July 8.—Reading town team walked away with the Burnham A. A. of Dorchester, at the Playstead, to-day. Light, pitcher for the visitors, went into the air in the third inning when Reading scored 7 of her runs. The score was 10 to 2.

GINN, 10; WALWORTH, 1.

In a very one-sided game Ginn & Company defeated Walworth & Company yesterday afternoon on Cambridge Common by a score of 10 to 1.

WAKEFIELDS WIN.

Wakefield, July 8.—Wakefield Independents defeated the neighboring Ballardvale team at the ball grounds to-day by a score of 11 to 4.

EASY FOR ST. JOHN'S.

St. John's Literary Institute boys had things all their own way in the game they played yesterday on Cambridge Field with the Melrose A. C. Coady made four home runs and the final score was, Institute, 16; Melrose, 1.

SHERIDAN MAKES WORLD'S RECORD IN ALL ROUND CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES

At Tech Field, Brookline, yesterday, Martin Sheridan of the Greater New York Irish A. A. won the all-round athletic championship and also broke two world's records at Tech Field, Brookline, by tabulating the highest number of points in the history of the kind of competition.

Back in 1900 Harry Gill, the Canadian, scored a total of 6,360¼ points, but this was eclipsed by Sheridan, who collected together 6,820½ points, which is a new mark for future generations to try to beat.

Ellery Clark, who has twice won the [illegible] was a good second, though handicapped because of a strained tendon in his [illegible] which was apparent in some of the events in which he was expected to do better than he did. At that, Clark came close to the record himself, but could not equal the performance which he made in 1903.

Adam Gunn of Buffalo, who has appeared several years in the all-arounds, pressed Clark for second place, and was seventy-six points behind him.

George McK. Hall of Buffalo made a good fourth, and Louis Allen, the other local man besides Clark, came in at the foot of the list.

Sheridan a Dark Horse.

Sheridan was the dark horse of the championships, as it was the first time that he had entered them, and his capabilities were unknown, but what prompted him to enter this year was the splendid marks he had made in practice, and his friends encouraged him to take part. A small delegation came over from Gotham to see him win, and they gave him quite an ovation.

He is a six-footer, and perfectly formed, without an ounce of superfluous flesh on his limbs, and he looked every inch a race horse.

The ease with which he performed in every event called forth favorable comment and admiration as the effort he made in negotiating the runs and jumps was hardly perceptible.

His smoothness of action showed what a natural athlete he was, and as he is only 26 years old he has still greater fame in store for himself on the track. Sheridan had made the boast before the games that he would beat the existing record, as he had figured it out by his performances in trials and the marks he had made showed that he could do it.

Sheridan has always been known as the record discus thrower, a game he is master of, and he will compete in his specialty at the St. Augustine games at the Locust street grounds on July 22.

He was accompanied by Ernie Hjertberg, the well known trainer of Columbia, who coached him right through the entire program.

Too Hot for Good Records.

The day was almost too oppressive to expect the best performances from the men, and considering the conditions the results were all the more remarkable.

It was a choice field of men who had fought on track and field for several years with the exception of Allen, who represented the Boston Y. M. C. A. and it was something new for him, but he did well. Kyne of New York, the sixth entry, did not put in an appearance.

There were many athletic celebrities in the gathering who braved the hot sun to view the muscular athletes at their work. Jack Moakley, the Cornell trainer, who won the intercollegiate championships with his team, eulogized Sheridan for his grand work.

"He is one of the finest athletes I have ever seen," said Moakley. "He compares favorably with Harry Gill, who was a wonder, and I think he might beat him, as he has beaten his record. His clean form in every event in the list showed what he is."

Jim Lathrop of Harvard, Keene Fitzpatrick of the University of Michigan, Mahan, the athletic trainer of Tech, and Hugh McGrath were all loud in their praises of the winner in his record-breaking feat.

From the first event it was close between Sheridan and Clark, and after four events were finished Clark had the margin of his rival, but in the last six events Sheridan came strong, while Clark fell back slightly.

The 100-yard dash, the first event was run off in two heats, Clark winning one and Hall the other, in the same time of 10 4-5 seconds, and they got the highest totals.

Sheridan Starts Well.

There were no waits between events, and the men got ready to put the sixteen-pound shot. Sheridan surprised the talent by shoving the sphere out forty feet and one inch, and Gunn took second, with Clark third.

Clark's leg prevented him from doing better than 5 feet 4 inches in the high jump, and he was tied with Hall for last place. Sheridan and Gunn were tied for first place at 5 feet 6 inches.

The half mile walk was a trouble maker for the men and Clark was the only one to show that he knew the fine points about square heel and toe.

He started out in the lead, but Gunn and Sheridan passed him in the first quarter, but on the last lap he went by the pair easily, and won with plenty to spare, with Sheridan second.

Clark made his best showing in the hammer throw, when he heaved the weight [illegible] feet and [illegible] inches. Sheridan, who was second, was only good for 112 feet [illegible].

The pole vault was a tough event for [illegible], surprisingly, a high mark [illegible] as Sheridan and Hall were [illegible] 10 feet 6 inches, a very creditable [illegible]. Clark, who is an expert [illegible], was thought to be a sure thing in the hurdles, but he could not hold Sheridan, who beat him by four feet.

Won Three Events.

After trying in the pole vault Sheridan refused to try again and he came out and won the next three events, which were the 120 yds. hurdles, throwing the 56 pound weight, broad jump and mile run, doing well in each.

Gunn tried to keep with him in the mile run, which was the final event, and called on what powers the men had left but they all got on the marks with the exception of Hall, who had had enough.

Sheridan and Gunn set a beautiful stride and ran as if tied together. They came into the stretch that way but Sheridan had the spurt and passed Gunn going to the tape. Clark and Allen were nearly an eighth of a mile behind.

TWO BAGGERS SHARE HONORS WITH RIOTS IN DOUBLE-HEADER

Special to the Sunday American.

Philadelphia, July 8.—The Champs never had such a strenuous afternoon as they had at the American League Park this afternoon. The tremendous crowds, the riots (which are described on Page 31 of the SUNDAY AMERICAN), the terrific hitting, the accidents, and so on made them feel mighty glad when Umpire O'Loughlin called the second game of the double header at the end of the eighth inning.

Boston won the first game, 11 to 8, though at the end Dinneen was being hit so hard that Tannehill relieved him. But before this the Champs had sent Mr. Plank to the woods and done a few things to Mr. Bender, his successor. Hits into the crowd went for two bases and there were plenty of them.

Collins and his men lost the second game 11 to 4. It was nip and tuck for six innings. Then Freeman let a grounder go through his legs, missing a chance to retire the side, and the Athletics batted in three runs. They made four more that they didn't need in the eighth.

Of course as things went the ball games themselves were more or less of a farce. Both teams used two pitchers in the first game, but in the second Winter and Henley stuck it out, though Winter was bumped most unmercifully.

The Champs began scoring as soon as the first game began. Singles by Selbach and Parent, a base on balls and Freeman's two-bagger were good for two runs.

The Athletics scored in the second on Collins's wild throw and Murphy's single, and again in the third on Hartsel's double and Lave Cross's single.

In the third Boston made six runs on Freeman's double, Ferris's single, two-baggers by Dinneen, Selbach, Burkett and Stahl and Collins's single. Then Bender took Plank's place.

Philadelphia got another in the fourth on two-base hits by Schreck and Hartsel, and one more in the fifth on Lave Cross's double and Seybold's single.

More Runs for Boston.

In the sixth Burkett's double, singles by Collins and Stahl and a fielder's choice scored two more for Boston. In the seventh Dinneen's single, Parent's sacrifice and Collins's single gave the Champs another.

The Athletics made three in the seventh on Stahl's muff of Seybold's fly, singles by Murphy, M. Cross and Bender and a wild throw by Collins. In the eighth Lord batted for Hoffman, as Tannehill had relieved Dinneen, and he singled. Davis was hit by a pitched ball, and Lave Cross singled, scoring Lord. That was all, and the game ended 11 to 8 in favor of Boston.

Nip and Tuck in the Second.

Winter and McGovern went in for Boston, while Henley and Barton were the Athletics' battery in the second game. There was nothing doing until the last half of the third. Henley led off with a double into the crowd and scored on Hartsel's single. Davis hit for two bases, scoring Hartsel.

Boston evened the score in the fourth. Burkett was safe on Murphy's fumble, and Collins walked. Stahl forced Burkett, but hits by Freeman and Ferris sent in two runs.

In the last half of the fourth Murphy hit for two bags and scored on Barton's single. Again Boston tied the game in the fifth on Winter's safe bunt, Selbach's sacrifice and Burkett's single, but the other side took the lead again in their half on Hoffman's single, a steal, McGovern's wild throw and Lave Cross's grounder to Freeman.

Tied in the Sixth.

It was a tie again in the sixth, when Ferris hit for two bases and scored on Freeman's double, but the home team put the game on ice in the seventh. Hartsel walked, but was forced by Hoffman. Davis was out to Ferris, but Lave Cross doubled and Freeman let Seybold's grounder go through his legs. Monte Cross and Murphy [illegible] with safe hits and three runs resulted.

In the eighth they rubbed it into Winter and amid a fusillade of singles and two-baggers scored four runs. Then O'Loughlin called the game on account of darkness and physical exhaustion.

ST. LOUIS, 6; CLEVELAND, 5.

Special to the Sunday American.

St. Louis, July 8.—St. Louis won from Cleveland this afternoon in a ninth inning finish, 6 to 5. Up to the ninth St. Louis was in the lead, 4 to 3. In the first half of the ninth Cleveland found Pelty for two two-baggers and a single and scored two runs. St. Louis came back in the second half with two singles, a base on balls and a sacrifice, and put over two runs with but one out. Both Pelty and Moore were hit freely, St. Louis doing the more opportune sticking and taking advantage of Cleveland's fielding breaks. Attendance—4,500. Score:

FOILS AND SAVATE FOR FITZSIMMONS IN GAY PAREE.

Bob Is Over in the French Metropolis Now and What He Won't Do Won't Be Worth Doing, Is the Opinion of Tad

BY TAD.

The next time we see Kid Fitzsimmons of Hanstralia he will be there with the big shrink of the s[illegible] motions with the mitts and the wee wee accent.

Bobby is at present k[illegible] life in gay Paree and what he won't do over there won't be worth doing.

Fitz with his wig sitting under an electric fan and sucking up the absinthe and creme de menthe, while the fair girlies on the stage chirp songs of the day and try and put dents in the ceiling.

When do we expect Bob back? Huh! Oh, he may be back. Some day he may return. Chances are that he will get in that game of savate over there and fight until his feet like his hands are on the blink and then he will try fencing, forging the best in the world until [illegible] up the fighting game.

With the foils Fitz would be a champ. There is nothing to stick him in. The place where he is free [illegible] is too narrow to land on and the only place to hit him is on the shins, and that doesn't count [illegible] in the spear for spear game. [illegible] dressed [illegible] with the foils would look like a huly bean on a hatpin. He might. There's no telling what the old rock cod might do. Now that the curtain is falling on his career in the ring Robbie will have to [illegible] the foils or the feet to keep before the people.

LOWELL WON TWICE.

Lowell, May 8.—Lowell won a double-header from Nashua this afternoon. The scores were 4 to 1 and 12 to 4 and the visitors were pretty well demoralized when the second game was ended in the seventh inning.

Owing to the late arrival of the Nashua team there was a delay in starting the first game. [illegible] It was just as well since the day was a scorcher, and even the fans kept away until the middle of the afternoon because of the heat. Wall, the crack first-baseman of Lowell, was taken ill in the seventh inning of the first game and was replaced by Sullivan. The scores:

SPEEDY THOROUGHBREDS ENTERED FOR RACES AT NARRAGANSETT PARK

Providence, July 8.—A week from tomorrow the gates of historic Narragansett Park, Providence, will be thrown open to the public and the inauguration of running races will take place. Many alterations have taken place, and the park is pronounced one of the best in the country.

Well Known Owners.

Among the nominators to the stakes and those whose colors will be carried at the meeting are August Belmont, chairman of the Jockey Club and of the State Racing Commission of New York; R. T. Wilson, Jr., Vice President of the Saratoga Racing Association [illegible] S. S. Brown, owner of Broomstick, holder of the world's record at a mile and a quarter; P. S. P. Randolph, [illegible] commercial, social and sporting [illegible]. There [illegible] son of the [illegible] Amerian who, with an American [illegible] horse [illegible] English Derby [illegible] Richards of Boston, who has captured famous stakes in [illegible] brief period on the turf; the Messrs. Clyde, of steamship fame, possessors of the Woodlawn Vase; [illegible] W. [illegible] Jones, known everywhere in the Old Dominion; the Messrs. Morris, whose father founded Morris Park, and [illegible] the best sportsmanship of the South.

Rhode Island Handicap.

The feature for opening day at Narragansett Park will be the $2,500 Rhode Island Handicap at a mile and a sixteenth, for which forty-five horses are entered. W. S. Vosburgh, the official handicapper of the Jockey Club, will allot the weights for the race.

Dolly Spanker, who last year won nine stakes in New York City, and whose winnings [illegible] more than $30,000, is perhaps to Easterners the best known of those engaged. He has run a mile in 1:38 3-5, and is just now in excellent condition for a bruising race, as his victory at Sheepshead last week showed. Gamara, his stable mate, and last season a winner of nearly $[illegible], also is engaged. Both will wear the gold and green silks of Mr. Wilson.

George C. Bennett, who has one of the most formidable stables in all the West, has named the fast filly Dishabille, winner of four straight races at Buffalo, Little Scout, always a contender at more than a mile, and Au Revoir, a horse that has had a nice rest and is apt to beat anybody's horse when he is fresh.

Boston's Good Entry.

New Englanders will, of course, have sentimental interest in Ostrich, owned by Mr. Richards, who races as the Boston Stable. Ostrich, as everyone knows, won the Crescent City Derby at New Orleans and the Jerome Handicap at Morris Park as a three-year-old and this year ran third in the Brooklyn Handicap.

Claude, who has won more Derbies and traveled farther than any other thoroughbred now racing, will be on hand for the fray and so will Spring and Proper, the latter of whom won the Excelsior Handicap this year but was set back because of the accident which marred his [illegible].

Tokalon, the very best of the get of the great Tammany, also has been engaged. It will be recalled that last year this was the young mare with which the West thought it could wrest supremacy from Beldame.

Right Royal, winner of the Crescent City Derby this year, will also be a starter and so will Sylvenssin, a colt that his owner thought enough of to ship from Louisville to Buffalo to race in the Derby there against Oxford and the Canadian crack, Tongorder.

The weights for the Rhode Island Handicap, which certainly should be one of the best races of the year anywhere, will be pronounced by Mr. Vosburgh on Thursday in time to offer opportunities for fuller review.

CHALLENGE GOLF CUP FOR NEWSPAPER MEN

John I. Taylor, owner of the Boston American baseball team and an enthusiastic follower of golf, announced yesterday that he would give the Press Golf Club of New England a permanent challenge cup to be competed for annually.

The Press tournament will be held this week on the course of the Wollaston Golf Club at Wollaston, beginning to-morrow.

ROUGHAN A. C., 4; GLENVALES, 3.

Roughan A. C. of Charlestown, won their ninth victory at Franklin Park, against the Glenvales of Jamaica Plain, 4 to 3, in a thirteen inning game. It was a pitcher's battle throughout.

STINSON WON RACE AT BEACH TRACK

Bill Stinson, the big Cambridge rider, won the twenty-five-mile three-cornered paced bike race at Revere, beating Menus Bedell, of New York, and Louie Mettling of Jamaica Plain. His time was 38:06 4-5. Bedell had the lead for nearly twent[illegible] miles when his motor went wrong and he lost the lead [illegible] to Stinson who finished in the lead by two and a half laps.

Mettling's pace went in the bad before he had ridden a dozen miles and he quit the race.

The riding of Bedell, who was seen for the first time behind pace, was a revelation to the fans, and his chances were good for winning till the accident happened.

Stinson rode in the best form seen this season and he showed great speed on the fourteenth mile, when he challenged Bedell and passed him, causing the New Yorker to be shaken.

Ten mile open amateur—Won by Mat Downey; second, E. L. Collins; third, J. J. McKinnon; fourth, W. F. Drea. Time—25m. 17 2-5s.

NORTH CAMBRIDGE, 12; BOLTON A. A., 12

The North Cambridge A. C. defeated the Bolton A. A., 12 to 7, in a fast game on Rindge Park Saturday afternoon. Pitcher Cleveland and Fielders Humphrey and Sweeney were the star players of the day. Batteries were: North Cambridge A. C., Cleveland and Harden; Bolton A. A., Tracey and Bellis.

TRAVERS BEAT PROAL.

Rye, N. Y., July 8.—Jerome D. Travers to-day defeated F. A. Proal, four up and three to go for the first cup in the Apawamis Club's regular Summer tournament. Travers was at scratch but did not return his card in the afternoon rounds. His contest with Proal for the chief cup was marked by superior putting. Their medal scores were relatively poor.

AUTHOR OF "TENTING" GONE TO HIS LAST CAMP GROUND

WALTER KITTREDGE, FAMOUS FOR WAR SONG, DEAD.

Manchester, N. H., July 8.—In the pleasant cottage at Reed's Ferry, where he had lived since before the Civil War, Walter Kittredge, author of "Tenting on the Old Campground," died to-day.

Few of the songs that were popular in the days of the great conflict had a greater vogue than "Tenting." None of them remained popular for so many years. The copyright was renewed twice, and more than 100,000 copies were sold, on all of which the composer received a royalty, although when it was first written he had offered the song for sale for $15 and been refused.

Strange to say, more copies were sold last year than in any preceding year since the words and music were written, if the three months immediately succeeding its publishing are excepted. In those three months more than 10,000 copies were disposed of.

It is many years since Mr. Kittredge had been active in his business of minstrelsy. His success as a singer and musician in the days during and immediately after the war gave him a competence, and he had spent the past decade or two resting after a busy life. He was seventy-one years old.

Under Spell of Old Memories.

A year next month, when the national Grand Army encampment was held in Boston, Mr. Kittredge attended, and his appearance aroused a storm of applause as he was introduced to the comrades in Mechanics' Hall as the author of the famous song. He had an opportunity the very day following to demonstrate that his ability to compose had not fled with the years.

He called on his publishers and had a talk with them regarding the renewal of the copyright on "Tenting To-night." They informed him that if he could write another verse, the entire song, old verses and new, could be again copyrighted. Mr. Kittredge said he would think it over and return with his decision. He went away and took a seat on the Common. There, under the influence of the memories, the great campfire of the night before and the big parade he had witnessed, he scribbled the new verse on the back of an envelope and had it back at the office of the publishers in less than a half hour from the time he went away. This is the new verse he composed:

The war is over on the old campground,
After the fight of years,
The grass is waving o'er the mound
Where our dear ones dropped their tears.
Chorus.
Our flag waves serene
Over the green,
After the tears of years.

In his boyhood days Mr. Kittredge lived on his father's farm. He was an enthusiastic lover of music, although his opportunities to study or play were limited. When he was a dozen years old his father bought a seraphine, the first musical instrument he had had.

A Traveling Minstrel.

When he had reached the age of twenty-one he entered upon the career toward which his natural bent inclined, driving about the country with a melodeon in his carriage, and giving entertainments in the small towns in his way. He recited, played and sang. Sometimes he was successful; sometimes fortune frowned. But as the months went by he became more popular and better known. He associated himself with Joshua Hutchinson of the famous Hutchinson family, and later sang with the entire family. Meantime he learned to play the violin and composed much music, singing it himself. He never had a song published until he wrote "Tenting," in the Fall of 1863.

When the war first broke out Mr. Kittredge had tried to enlist, but had failed to pass the physical examination, and continued his tours through the country, principally New England, Canada, New York and Pennsylvania. He was a stern Abolitionist, and his writings partook of his sympathies. "Red, White and Blue" was his composition. Then, when the war was half over, he composed "Tenting on the Old Campground," and after he and the Hutchinsons had sung the song a few times his reputation was made. He has said, during the past year, that he composed words and music at the same time with a violin, and that he did not write the music until he came to have the song published, singing it and teaching it to the Hutchinson family by ear.

By Walter Kittredge
We're tenting to night on the old camp ground give us a song
Cheer our weary hearts a song of home and friends we love so dear.
Chorus
Many are the hearts that are weary to-night wishing for the war to cease
Many are the hearts looking for the right to see the dawn of peace

GHOST JOKES DRIVES A WOMAN TO KILL HERSELF.

Mrs. Carolina F. M. Joseph of New Bedford, Living Next to Cemetery, Goaded by Neighbors' Cruelty, Takes Poison

New Bedford, July 8.—The terror which she felt when she first saw the little white cottage jutting against the wall of the desolate graveyard has been fulfilled, and Mrs. Carolina F. M. Joseph is dead, frightened into suicide by ghostly jokers.

Until she moved with her family to the house at No. 11 Rural street a few weeks ago Mrs. Joseph was a happy and contented woman. She was but thirty-four years old, had five beautiful children and a devoted husband.

The best cottage which Joseph could find in the district was the one which is nearest to Rural Cemetery.

Mrs. Joseph knew nothing of the cemetery until she rode up to her cottage with a load of furniture. Then she was terrified. But to please her husband she stifled her fears and tried to be happy.

Only, as she became acquainted, she could not but tell the neighbors the horror she felt, and soon when she was absent her fears became the cause for much laughter.

Then, because she would not let her children play with those of some of the neighbors, a feeling grew up against Mrs. Joseph. Practical jokers thought it would be a good plan to give her a scare in return for her exclusiveness.

So they encouraged some children to dress themselves in sheets and run at Mrs. Joseph from the cemetery when she should go out into her yard after dark.

The plan worked to perfection. The "ghosts" called the woman by name and she ran into the house, hysterical, sure that the spirits had called to her and were preparing her grave.

Night after night the jokers kept up their torments. The woman was on the verge of nervous prostration. She could neither sleep nor eat, and finally deciding that it was better not to longer resist the spirits who called to her, she went down into her cellar and took a lot of paris green.

YOUNG MAN KILLED BY EXPRESS TRAIN

North Attleboro, July 8.—Within sight of 200 laborers who have begun work of abolishing the dangerous North Attleboro crossing of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., Adelard Ayotte, eighteen years, was ground to death by the Federal express to-day.

DISCOVERS A RICH GOLD MINE WHILE PLAYING BALL.

First Baseman Picks Up a Stone, Sees It Is Rich and at Night Makes Sure Before Getting Property Cheaply

Ryholite (Bullfrog District), Nev., July 8.—At the baseball game between the teams of Rhyolite and Beatty, William Griffith of Salt Lake City, Utah, playing first base for the Rhyolite team, reached down to stop a fast grounder with visions of an easy putout for his team, when the ball struck a small stone and bounded away. While waiting for the ball to be returned by one of the spectators he picked up the stone, which he found to be full of free gold.

The game was played on the property of the Shoshone National Bank Mining Company, which is on the flat between Ladd and Montgomery mountains. Griffith put the stone in his pocket, and late at night, with the aid of a lantern, prospected the region where he made his find. With a prospector's hammer he knocked off about ten pounds of rock, and by his assayer's outfit learned that it ran $27 per ton. Griffith conveyed the knowledge of his find to one or two insiders in Rhyolite, who immediately negotiated for the purchase of an interest in the company and secured it at what is considered a "white chip" in Rhyolite.

The company's superintendent at once ordered a shaft sunk on the spot, in addition to the one already being sunk at another location on the property. Less than 100 feet away, at a depth of thirty-three feet, this shaft has already disclosed a formation that makes it a certainty that the shaft is on a ledge that is a continuation of the Bullfrog National Bank Mining Company's famous ledge. It is reported that Griffith has been offered $25,000 profit for the interest he secured within the past twelve hours.

TWO KILLED IN FREIGHT WRECK

New York, July 8.—Two men were killed and three injured in a rear-end collision between two freight trains on the Pennsylvania railroad at Marion, N. J., to-day. The wrecked cars caught fire, but the blaze was quickly extinguished by the fire department.

MORE BOSTON POSTAL TUBES

Washington, D. C., July 8.—The commission named by the Postmaster-General to consider the question of postal pneumatic tubes in large cities will probably meet here next week. It is believed the commission will recommend the extension of the pneumatic tube service from Boston to Cambridge.

PEARY HAS PROMISE OF $10,000; NEEDS $40,000 MORE.

Millionaire, Whose Name is Withheld, Responds to the Appeal of Explorer for the Expenses of Polar Voyage

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, July 8.—Commander Robert E. Peary, who is now fitting out his steamship, the Roosevelt, to make another effort to find the North Pole, enjoyed a happy day today, for the mail brought him a message from a millionaire who tendered aid to the extent of the present expedition to the amount of $10,000.

Commander Peary, finding himself short of funds, had made an appeal for $50,000 to aid him in his North Pole exploration and this letter was the first answer.

The writer required the explorer to keep his name a secret, but says that he is willing to make one of five to contribute $50,000, or one of ten to contribute $100,000 to help defray the expenses of the perilous expedition.

Peary's ship moved from the Weehawken wharves today to the north end of the Atlantic Transport Company's pier, where it will remain, shipping stores. The ship is daily besieged by applicants from every walk of life, who come to volunteer to accompany the expedition.

CHAFFEE TO SIT IN TAFT'S CHAIR IN HIS ABSENCE.

While Secretary of War Is Away and Assistant Is Ill, Chief of General Staff Will Perform the Duties

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Washington, July 8.—Lieutenant General Adna R. Chaffee has been authorized by President Roosevelt to perform the duties of Secretary of War during the absence of Secretary Taft and the illness or absence of the Assistant Secretary of War, General Oliver.

Some question arose as to who, under the law, should act as Secretary of War during the absence of both the Secretary and assistant, and Judge Advocate General Davis was asked for an opinion. In a lengthy report General Davis decides that the law vests the authority in the President to designate "the head of a military bureau of the War Department" to perform such duties, and holds that the chief of staff has the legal character of head of a military department.

In view of this decision the President has designated General Chaffee to act temporarily as Secretary of War.

NEW INSTRUMENT TO CHEAT AT POKER IS FOUND.

By Wires Working Through the Sleeve the Dealer Is Able to "Hold Out" as Many Cards as He Wants

Denver, July 8.—One of the most curious gambling devices ever seen in Denver has been taken from S. D. Noll, late of San Francisco, by Detectives Peterson and Brown. It consists of a complicated and ingenious device for "holding out" a poker hand, or even half a deck. Noll declares that he has not been operating.

The device consists of a pair of metal plates hinged together with springs so as to clasp and hold tightly any number of cards from a pack. This is held by a frame strapped to the arm under the coat, and is extended or withdrawn by a system of wires, strings and springs which would make Darius Green's flying machine look as simple as a pair of rattlebones.

One wire spring runs up the coatsleeve, down under coat and vest and down the leg of the trousers to the ankle, where it connects with other bandages and hooks. By manipulating the leg the cardholder is drawn up the coat sleeve or extended to the palm of the hand. The player, when dealing, can hold out as many cards as he chooses.

Noll declares that he paid $40 for the device, but claims that he has been unable to make it work. Captain Connor is not so sure of his failure.

Noll is a gigantic, innocent-looking fellow, just the kind of a man who could win at cards all night and never be suspected of cheating, where a flashy-looking man would arouse suspicion at once.

"If I could have made the blamed thing work, I wouldn't have been working on a bridge gang for six months, you can bet on that," said Noll.

He was captured through applying to a tailor to sew a spring into his coat sleeve so that the sleeve would stand open and not interfere with the working of the machinery. He will probably be given hours to leave town.

CATHOLIC YOUNG MEN TO MEET IN ALBANY

Danbury, Ct., July 8.—Rev. Walter J. Shanley of this city, president of the Catholic Young Men's National Union, announced to-day that the annual convention of the union would be held in Albany, N. Y., August 22 and 23.

Census Returns in 92 Districts Show Decline of 2,635 in Ten Years.

The small towns of Massachusetts are shrinking in population. The reports of the census enumerators, the results of whose work has been tabulated for ninety-two of the smallest towns in the State, show it.

Hardly a town whose population was under 500 in 1895 has gained. The percentages of loss run in many cases higher than twenty-five per cent.

What is the cause of this? What lesson of the trend of population may the State learn from these figures?

Are the thinly settled sections of the State dying out?

Or is this simply the natural modern movement of men and women to the large cities and towns?

Or has modern business, with the growth of centralized industries, a share in the change?

These, and similar questions, are at once suggested by the figures that have been tabulated and given out by Charles Felton Pidgin, chief of the bureau of statistics of labor.

Takers Still at Work.

The taking of the census was begun on May 1. Hundreds of enumerators have been at work and are at work to-day throughout the State. Comparatively few of their results have yet been reported. It is only in the smaller places that the labor is finished. Ninety-two towns in all have been completely tabulated.

Until the returns are more complete it will be difficult to explain beyond a doubt the shrinkage that the figures show to have taken place in the small places.

There are isolated cases where the falling off in population is at once explainable by local conditions, yet these places are mostly of the larger sort. For instance, the worst sufferer in the State is North Brookfield, with a shrink in ten years from 4,635 to 2,617. This was due to the closing of the Batchelder shoe factory, which was the principal industry of the town. And the shutting down of this business was an ordinary failure, in no way attributable to conditions of trade that have arisen during the years since the last census was taken.

Ashland, Hampden, Holland and Heath are shown to have decreased in inhabitants about 25 per cent. No especial reason can be given at present for this. "The people move away" is the only explanation that seems to be forthcoming in those towns. But why do they move away? is the question, and the answer is not forthcoming.

Mt. Washington has lost more than 36 per cent., a figure that looks very large until one learns that it had only 136 residents ten years ago, on which to base the computation of loss.

All Small Places Lose.

If any one, or two, or three of these towns had lost, it would not be surprising. What is worthy of attention is that nearly every one of the very small places is losing, and apparently losing steadily.

It appears probable that the large towns and cities are getting them, although this is not determinable until the returns are in from the entire state. It is a fact that the larger towns among those that have been reported, the towns with a population of 2,000 or 3,000, are very likely to show a normal gain, while a few of them show a gain out of proportion to that of previous decades.

The census authorities believe that when the cities of the state begin to come in it will be found that they have increased not only as would normally be expected, but additionally by the number of those who have migrated from the little places. Boston is expected to show a disproportionate gain. So is Springfield, and Worcester, and Lowell, Lawrence, New Bedford, Haverhill, Lynn, Brockton, Taunton and all the other cities except Fall River, which it is already known will fall 6,000 or 7,000 below its population of 1895, due to the exodus during the big strike.

In other words, it is thought the falling off in the towns represents simply the movement of population to the cities and their suburbs. It is noticeable that in the places thus far reported the towns that are located not far from large cities have shown a gain, rather than a loss. This may be explained by the greater ease with which better railroad facilities, trolley systems, bicycles and automobiles have made it possible for the city man to reach a suburban home.

Suburbs Filling Up.

More people are annually moving into the suburbs. The tendency of the population is to leave the smaller towns for the larger, and at the same time to do business in the city and sleep in the outskirts.

This explanation of the falling off in population of the ninety-two towns already reported upon must, however, be much a matter of estimate. It would normally be supposed that so many towns, taken in the aggregate, would show a comfortable gain over ten years ago, if for no other reason than the constant increase of births over deaths. But they show a material loss.

Ten years ago the population of these ninety-two towns was 76,768. To-day it is 74,133, a falling off of 2,635, or 3.554 per cent.

"Are All in the State."

"They are all in the State," he says. "We will find them when the cities come in. I know of one city whose population will probably be about 5,000 more than it is estimated to-day. I cannot say to-day officially that the cities have grown in population to more than cover the small towns' losses, but I believe the figures will show it.

"Boston alone will take care of many of the shrinkages. We do not know, except by guesswork, what the population of Boston is, as yet. The city was divided into 208 districts, with an enumerator in each, besides which there have been added special and assistant enumerators. Not all of these have reported, or can report for some time now. Each of them has about 3,000 people to list.

"There are special local explanations for a very few of the figures. North Brookfield lost nearly half its population because of the failure of the shoe factory. One of the towns in Hampshire County gained a great percentage because 300 Italian laborers, on a public work, happened to be within the town on the first day of May. Northampton is going to show a material gain because Smith College is within its limits and there are 1,065 girls attending the school and consequently counted there, instead of at their homes. There will be a similar result in Cambridge, and all other cities having schools. To be sure there were schools there ten years ago, but the proportion of students has increased in all of them.

May Raise Salaries.

"An interesting result of the census is that judges and clerks of district courts may find their salaries raised as a result of the enumeration. For instance, the judicial district covered by Westfield includes that and seven other towns. If the population reaches 20,000 for the district the pay of the judge will be increased $200 a year, while that of the clerk of court will go up $100.

"Every letter carrier in Springfield is anxious to hear the result of the census in his city. If the population reaches 75,000 each carrier will receive more pay.

"But we can't tell about these other places. Here are the ninety-two on which we have completed the tabulation. Further than this I cannot go officially. Our guesses as to what the number of people will be in another place are just guesses and of no value to you or anybody else."

The result of the enumeration, so far as it has been tabulated, is given herewith. Figures usually are pretty dry reading. These figures, however, will be found generally interesting. When you have read them you will ask yourselves their meaning.

But even Mr. Pidgin does not know that, yet.

183 DEATHS DURING PAST WEEK IN BOSTON.

Report of Board of Health Shows Eighteen from Violent Causes and Five as the Result of Spotted Fever

An unusually large number of deaths from violent causes are shown in the report of the Board of Health for the week past. There were eighteen from these causes, and five deaths from spotted fever, the same number as the previous week.

The total number of deaths for the week is 183, an increase of eleven over the corresponding week last year.

The number of cases and deaths from infectious diseases reported is as follows: Diphtheria, [illegible] cases, one death; scarlet fever, thirteen cases, no deaths; typhoid fever, [illegible] cases, three deaths; measles, twenty-[illegible] cases, one death. The deaths from consumption were twenty-six, pneumonia [illegible], heart disease twenty-one, [illegible] four, marasmus one.

The number of children who died under one year was [illegible], and under five years thirty-seven. The number of persons who died over sixty years of age was forty. The deaths in public institutions were seventy-one.
